ADDRESS.

ANOTHER Volume of the SPORTING MAGAZINE the (Xth.) being completed, we have only to return thanks to our numerous Cuſtomers and Correſpondents, for their continued patronage and kind aſſiſtance.

WITH reſpect to the preſent conduct of the Magazine, we preſume to think, that the Volume now completed, will be found full as intereſting, if not more ſo, than any of the former. Without vanity we may ſay, the SPORTING MAGAZINE is the moſt entertaining work of the preſent day, and our beſt exertions ſhall be uſed to render the future Volumes equally acceptable with the public, as thoſe which have gone before them.

ROYAL HUNT.

THE ROYAL CHASE commenced on Monday, Sept. 25, under all the disadvantages that could possibly be expected from a combined severity of the elements; after a most dreadful torrent of rain for the preceding twenty hours (which had laid all the flat parts of the country under water), the Stag Hounds, with Lord Sandwich, and their appendages, were ready at the Starting Post, Ascot Heath, (with "some few of their faithful followers,") anxiously waiting a message from his Majesty, as no one present expecting (under the awful impressions of the dreary morning, and threatening atmosphere) his Majesty would venture to take the field, when to the no less joy than surprise of the few, his Majesty arrived, attended by General Gwynne and Mr. Villers only: a young Deer, never before hunted, was instantly turned out, to the thinnest field ever known on a similar occasion: when unfortunately taking the worst ground, he crossed Sunning Hill Bog, and afforded scope for speculation. The major part of the horsemen taking the circle of Sunning Hill, were thrown out for the only burst of the day; Johnson, Gosden, Starling, Mr. Ravenshaw, and Mr. Taplin, being the only five who headed and stopped the hounds at King's Beech, where there was a delay of near ten minutes, for his Majesty to get up; when they were again let loose, and going over two miles of the most difficult and worst riding ground in the Forest, or its environs, they reached the Swampy Bogs and Mashes, (nearly covered with water, and intersected with Alder Banks, and Ozier Beds) between Virginia Water and Thorpe, where they threw up, and after the most indefatigable exertions of Johnson the Huntsman, and every Yoeman Pricker, for full three hours, without the least trait, scent, hit, or slot, they were under the necessity of submitting to the mortification of being beat (with a chace of only five miles) on the first day of the season, and by a Deer that had never before been put in fear of their superior force and instinct. His Majesty could not be persuaded to relinquish the attempt at recovery, till repeated rains came on so dreadfully severe, as to force the most resolute to seek for shelter. Sir John, and Lady Lade, with Mr. Batson, were all of the Old School, who "braved the fury of the day."

To the EDITORS of the SPORTING MAGAZINE.

GENTLEMEN,

THE ſeaſon is at length approaching, when we are to derive a fund of amuſement from your occaſional deſcription of long or ſingular chaces, derived from the kind and communicative pens of your Correſpondents, in various parts of the kingdom. Theſe, when authentic and conſiſtent, every old ſportſman is pleaſed either to read or to hear; but in future have charity enough to ſpare the dull recital of a hare hunt through a number of pariſhes, or the incredible "hair breadth 'ſcapes" in the chace of a bag fox; for though theſe things may read well amongſt the juvenile Jemmies in the City, you, Mr. Editor, ought to know, that in the Country we are not very fond of

HUMBUG.

In anſwer to this Correſpondent we ſhall ſay, that our endeavours ſhall be exerted to pleaſe the readers in general of the Sporting Magazine. The ſelections ſhall be made according to our beſt judgment, and with a wary caution againſt all attempts at that ſpecies of impoſition, which he ſo elegantly terms HUMBUG.

Accident at LINCOLN RACES, &c.

AT Lincoln races an accident happened, of which the following are the particulars. The Subſcription Purſe of Seventy Guineas was run for on the Friday, and the horſes came in in the order as under:

Mr. Wentworth's br. c. Harry Rowe, 4 yrs old —	1	1
Ld. Clermont's br. f. Hornpipe, 4 yrs old —	4	2
Sir C. Turner's ch. c. Pepper-Pot, 4 yrs old —	2	3
Dr. J. Willis's b. m. by Telemachus, 5 yrs old	3	4

Before ſtarting, 2 to 1 Harry Rowe agſt the field; at ſtarting, 3 to 1 he won; after 1ſt heat, 4 to 1. Coming up the 2d heat, Pepper-pot was leading near the winning poſt, when a man on foot croſſed, and threw the horſe and rider, (Dixon Bowers) notwithſtanding which the rider re-mounted, and came in third. Harry Rowe could not have won the heat but for this accident.

Children may ſtand on Lincoln courſe and ſee the horſes run the whole round; notwithſtanding this advantage, John Bull is obſtinate, and whips and double-cords cannot keep him in due bounds. This was verified at the above races: the horſes poſitively had not ſpace to race in; and no ſooner were the whip-men paſſed than the void part was filled. No ſurprize at the unfortunate accident on Friday: ſimilar have frequently happened on the ſame courſe, and will again unleſs proper ways and means are taken as a preventive. The young man who cauſed the accident, is ſon of a reputable farmer in the neighbourhood, and actually attempted to croſs the ground (or was puſhed forward by others) at the moment the horſe was paſſing at full ſpeed, and all three came down with dreadful violence. The mare, Hornpipe, was cloſe following, and leaped over the whole. The farmer was taken up for dead, one arm broken, and otherwiſe much bruiſed; he is notwithſtanding in a way of recovery (Sept. 13th). Dixon Bowers, the rider, and his horſe, (we are happy to ſay) were not very much injured. Had not this accident happened, happened, Pepper-pot certainly would have won the heat, and, in all probability, the purse, Harry Rowe appearing to be completely beaten.

The main of cocks, at the Rein-Deer pit, Huddleston and Newton, feeders, was won by the former.

Account of a Bee-Eater.

By Mr. White.

WE had in this village (Selborne, in Hampshire) more than twenty years ago, an idiot boy, who, from a child, shewed a strong propensity to bees: they were his food, his amusement, his sole object. As people of this cast have seldom more than one point in view, so this lad exerted all his few faculties on this one pursuit. In the winter, he dosed away his time in his father's house, by the fire-side, in a kind of torpid state, seldom departing from the chimney-corner: but in the summer he was all alertness, in quest of his game in the fields, and on sunny banks. Honey bees, humble bees, and wasps were his prey whenever he found them. He had no apprehension from their stings, but would seize them nudis manibus, and at once disarm them of their weapons, and suck their bodies for the sake of their honey bags. Sometimes he would fill his bosom between his shirt and his skin, with a number of these captives; and sometimes would confine them in bottles. He was a very merops apinster, or bee-bird, and very injurious to men that kept bees; for he would slide into their bee-gardens, and, sitting down before their stools, would rap with his fingers on their hives, and so take the bees as they came out. He has been known to overturn hives for the sake of honey, of which he was passionately fond. Where metheglin was making, he would linger about the tubs and vessels, begging a draught of what he called bee-wine. As he ran about, he used to make a humming noise with his lips, like the buzzing of bees. This lad was lean and sallow, and of a cadeverous complexion; and, except in his favourite pursuit, in which he was wonderfully adroit, discovered no manner of understanding. When a tall youth, he was removed to a distant village, and died before he arrived at manhood.

OPENING OF THE WINTER THEATRES.

Opening of Covent-Garden.

THE season commenced at this Theatre on Saturday night, Sept 16, with appearances the most auspicious, and under circumstances the most promising.—The House, at an early hour, was respectably filled, and ere the performance had far advanced, many parts of it were literally crowded. The principal performers, as they respectively came forward, received the warm greetings of an admiring audience; but Lewis, Fawcett, Holman and Murray, had the distinguished plaudits.

One of the productions of the immortal Bard, we were pleased to find was made to lead the mental banquet; it was the admirable Play of Henry the Fourth: The humourous fat Knight was represented by Fawcett with considerable ability: he gave ample proofs of his just conception of that arduous character, and his performance, on the whole, was highly creditable to his judgment and his discretion: he is is unquestionably the best Falstaff the stage at present boasts. Holman's Hotspur was very respectable, but it would have been rendered still more so had it possessed a greater share of dignity, and a less portion of revengeful warmth. Lewis sustained the part of the Prince with his accustomed success; and Murray was a most able representative of the king.

The Farm House closed the entertainment of the evening.

No alteration has taken place in the Theatre since last season, and for the best of all reasons, that none was necessary.

OPENING OF DRURY-LANE.

THIS elegant Theatre commenced its season, on Monday, night, Sept. 18, to a numerous and fashionable audience.

Though we could have wished that due homage had been paid to the genius of our immortal Bard, by beginning the dramatic campaign with one of his productions, yet as that was not altogether possible in the present state of the Company, it was certainly judicious in the Manager to give the public so excellent a substitute as the Comedy of the School for Scandal, in which Mrs. Jordan performed the character of Lady Teazle.

The alterations which have taken place in the Theatre are evident improvements, and render the whole interior at once magnificent and convenient. The chief of the alterations are as follows:—The Pit (to which there are two entrances, one in Russel-street, and the other in Woburn-street) is rendered far more commodious as to ingress and regress; there is a passage down the middle from a new door at the middle of the top; part of the paling is taken away, and that which remains is considerably lower than before; the seats are newly covered with crimson baize; and the whole is sunk about one foot, and so contrived as to be highly advantageous to hearing and sight. The Orchestra Boxes, which nearly surround the Pit, are increased, three on each side. They are beautifully enriched within by a light elegant paper, and externally by a painted curtain hanging in folds or festoons, which appear through a superb gilt triellage. The orchestra extends from one side of the Pit to the other. The proscenium, or frontispiece on the stage before the curtain, is rendered quite different in its appearance, by the addition of three boxes on each side, rising to the top, inclosed by a cove, admirably decorated by Mr. Greenwood. By this improvement the stage is contracted in its width. There is also a new sounding board, by means of which the voice is distinctly heard in every part of the House. The inside of the Boxes are painted a neat French grey, with crimson furniture, instead of the blue. The fronts of the pannels are nearly the same colour as before, with the addition of a gilt edge round the mouldings. The passages leading to the Boxes are also newly painted. The pillars which support the Boxes are newly silvered; and the whole produces a most charming effect.

Horse and Cattle Stealers.

The following interesting particulars relative to the apprehension of a gang of Horse and Cattle Stealers, though of Newspaper origin, are nevertheless too connected with the subject of

of our Miscellany, to warrant their omission. The active vigilance of the Magistrate, named in the transaction, deserves the highest praise; indeed, in all matters of Justice business, his penetration, perseverance, and resolution is such, as almost to leave him without an equal; for, when determined in his purpose, neither difficulty or danger impedes his career in the accomplishment of it.

THURSDAY, September 21, William Smith, alias Hunt, Stephen Reynolds, Edward Reynolds, and Joshua Halls, four more of the gang of Cattle and Horse Stealers, who have so long infested Middlesex and Essex, were committed to Chelmsford gaol by the Rev. H. B. Dudley, Clerk, charged on the oaths of Michael Reed, and others, with having feloniously stolen, at various periods, a considerable number of cows, heifers, and horses, the property of divers persons at Harefield, in Middlesex, and other places in the county of Essex.

This system of wholesale depredation was artfully carried on by the cattle stolen in one county being regularly consigned for sale to their associates in the other. Their detention arose from Michael Reed being apprehended on suspicion, at Maldon Fare, the week before, who, after a long examination, at length acknowledged his being an accessary, and gave evidence against his principal accomplices.

In consequence of this information, the above magistrate dispatched two persons with warrants to apprehend the several offenders, and by their exertions, Halls and Edward Reynolds were immediately secured near Chelmsford, and Smith, alias Hunt, and Stephen Reynolds, were apprehended the next morning at Edmonton in Middlesex, just as they were about to mount their horses to effect their escape.—The respective owners of several cows and heifers had their property freely restored to them by the unfortunate purchasers, after they were clearly identified by all the parties, except two cows, on the premises of Mr. Wm. Brown, of Brentwood, who refused to deliver them up at the requisition of the Magistrate; on this Mr. Dudley issued a warrant, under which Mr. Brown was brought to Chelmsford, where, on apologizing for his conduct, he was dismissed, after making a deposition how he came by the said cows, and the cattle were surrendered up to the Steward of George Calvert, Esq. of Harefield, in Middlesex whose property they are.

The following cattle have already been recovered, and delivered to the respective owners, viz.

Three cows to John Calvert, Esq. sold to Mr. William Brown, of Brentwood, and Mr. Brazier, of Galleywood Common.

One ditto to Mr. E. Trumper, sold to J. Heuton, Esq.

One ditto to Alexander Rose, Esq. of Harefield, Middlesex, sold to Mr. Clarence, of Paslow Hall.

Four ditto to Mr. Waghorne, of Harefield, sold to Captain Temple, of Chinkford.

Three cows to Mr. Randle, in Buckinghamshire.

Four heifers to Mr. Lungley, of Margaretting.

Three cows to Mr. Potter, of Stock Common.

One ditto to Mr. Lucken, of Writtle.

Several horses are detained, not yet owned.

Near one hundred horses, and fifty head of cow-kine, have been stolen ſtolen within ten miles of Chelmsford, during the ſhort reign of this deſperate gang.

THE TERRIER,

With a Copper-Plate to face this notice of that ſubject, in doing which we have only to remark on the ſpirit of the Etching.

THE ſtrong Terrier running to aſſiſt his ſavage companion in killing poor Grimalkin, is admirably pourtrayed, and does much credit to the talents of Mr. Hewit, who made the deſign, and etched the Copper-Plate.

ANECDOTE from SIR GEORGE STAUNTON's HISTORY of the EMBASSY to CHINA.

SIR George Staunton relates the following intereſting circumſtance, which took place much about the time the Chineſe Embaſſy touched at Teneriffe, and which at that time made ſome noiſe in the iſland.

A young lady, during her noviciate in a convent there, had, by uncommon accident, the opportunity of ſeeing a youth, who inſpired her with a paſſion inconſiſtent with her former views of religious retirement. Notwithſtanding the apparent freedom left to novices to alter their intentions, it is in fact as unſafe as it is rare. This young novice manifeſted no ſymptoms of reluctance in purſuing her original vocation, and preparations were made for the awful ceremony of taking the laſt ſolemn vow to renounce the world.

On ſuch occaſions it is cuſtomary to throw open the gates of the convent, in order to ſatisfy the public that the ladies within them are equally at liberty to quit it altogether, or to continue within its walls. When the day arrived which was to conceal her doom, and conſign her for ever to the cloiſter, her relations and friends aſſembled, as is uſual, to be preſent on the occaſion. In the crowd of the ſpectators was the young gentleman who was diſputing with Heaven the fair victim. After ſolemn exhortations from the pulpit, that now the final moment was arrived when ſhe was to devote herſelf to God, abandoning all ſublunary conſiderations, as well as all ties of affection or of blood, or inſtantly to quit the holy place ſhe then inhabited for ever, ſhe ſtretched out her hand to the youth, who advanced quickly to receive it, and hurrying with her directly from the church; while the prieſts, the nuns, her relations, and the people ſtood motionleſs with aſtoniſhment, the happy pair got ſoon ſafely to a place where they were married.

A recent CONVICTION in the County of Suſſex, on the GAME LAWS.

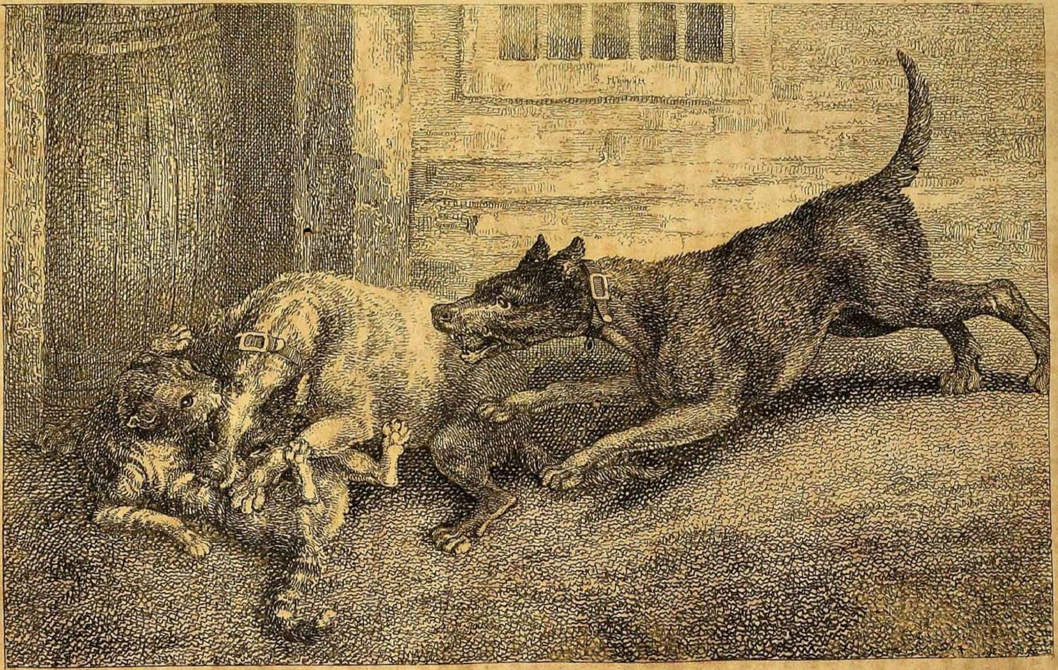
MR. Hutcheſon, of Lindfield, Suſſex, was lately convicted before Lord Sheffield, in the penalty of 5l. for having, in the courſe of laſt ſeaſon, ſhot a pheaſant, without having the leaſt qualification which is in ſuch caſes neceſſary. Alſo in the full penalty of 20l. for being ſeen with a dog and gun in the purſuit of game, without having taken out a certificate for that purpoſe. It ſhould be obſerved, that informations againſt treſpaſſes on the Game Laws will lie, if given at any period after the commiſſion of the offence; as, contrary to moſt other penal ſtatutes, theſe acts contain no limitation, in point of time, in their favour.



THE TERRIERS.

Published Oct. 1, 1797, by J. Wheble Warwick Court.

THE HORSE, FROM BUFFON'S NATURAL HISTORY.

Translated from the French.

AFTER young colts are weaned, they should not be put into too warm a stable, otherwise they will be rendered too delicate and too sensible to the impressions of the air. They should be often supplied with fresh litter, and kept clean by frequent friction. But they ought neither to be tied nor handled till they are near three years of age. The manger and rack should not be too high; for the necessity of stretching their neck and raising their head, may induce a habit of keeping them in that position, which would spoil their neck. When twelve or eighteen months old, their tails should be cut; the hair will shoot afterwards, and become stronger and thicker. At the age of two years, the male colts should be put with the horses, and the females with the mares. Without this precaution, the young males would fatigue and enervate themselves.

At the age of three years, or three and an half, we should begin to dress the colts, and to render them tractable. At first, a light easy saddle should be placed on them, and allowed to remain two or three hours each day. They should likewise be accustomed to receive a snaffle into their mouths, and to allow their feet to be lifted and struck, in imitation of shoeing. If destined for the coach or the draught, they ought to be harnessed as well as snaffled. A bridle is unnecessary at first: by means of a halter or cavesson on their nose, they may be made to trot up and down on a smooth piece of ground, with only a saddle and harness on their bodies: and, when they turn easily, and approach, without fear, the man who holds the longe or halter, they may then be mounted and dismounted, without making them walk, till they be four years old; for before this period, a horse has not strength enough to walk with a rider on his back. But, at four years, they may be mounted, and walked or trotted at small intervals*. When a coach-horse is accustomed to the harness, he may be yoked with a bred horse, and guided with a longe or halter passed through the bridle, till he begins to know his duty. The coachman may next try to make him draw, with the assistance of a man to push him gently behind, and even to give him some slight lashes. All this education should be gone through, before the young horses have their diet changed; for, after being fed with grain or straw, they are more vigorous, and consequently less docile, and more difficult to † break ‡.

The bit and the spur have been contrived to command the obedience of horses; the bit for the direction, and the spur for the quickness of their movements. Nature seems to have destined the mouth solely for receiving the impressions of taste and of appetite. But the mouth of the horse is endowed with such amazing sensibility, that, to this organ, in place of the eye and ear, man applies for conveying the indications of his will to this animal. The slightest motion or pressure of the bit gives him notice, and determines his course.

* See Elements de Cavalerie de M. de la Gueriniere, tom. i. p. 140.

† Le Nouveau parfait Marechal, par M. de Garsault, p. 86.

‡ By this management, it is admitted, that horses may be easier broke. But, after they are allowed a full and generous diet, they are apt to become vitious and unruly. For this reason, connoisseurs in horsemanship maintain, that, to break horses when they are in the highest order and best fed, is by much the most preferable mode.

This organ of sensation has no fault but that of perfection; its too great sensibility requires the most dexterous management; for the smallest abuse spoils the mouth, by rendering it insensible to the impressions of the bit. The senses of seeing and hearing cannot be blunted in this manner: but it is probable, that all attempts to govern horses by these organs have been found inconvenient. Besides, the signs transmitted by the touch have a stronger effect upon animals in general, than those conveyed by the eye or ear. The situation of a horse's eyes, with regard to his rider or conductor, is extremely unfavourable; and though they be often animated and conducted by the ear, it appears that the use of this organ is abandoned to the coarser species of horses; for, in the menage, they are seldom addressed by the ear. In a word, when horses are well educated, the smallest pressure of the thighs, the slightest movement of the bit, are sufficient to direct them. Even the spur is almost useless, being seldom employed but to force them to exert violent motions: And when, from the ignorance of the horseman, he gives the spur, and at the same time, retracts the bridle, the horse finding himself incited on one side, and restrained on the other, is obliged to rear, or make a perpendicular bound.

By means of the bridle, the horse is taught to keep his head in the most beautiful and advantageous situation, and the smallest sign or slightest movement of the rider is sufficient to make the animal assume its different paces. The trot is perhaps the most natural motion of a horse; but the pace, and even the gallop, are most easy to the rider; and these are the two motions which are most in request. When a horse lifts his fore leg in order to walk, this movement must be made with steadiness and facility, and the knee must likewise be bended. The lifted leg must appear, for a moment, to be supported, and, when let down, it must be firm and equally supported on the ground, before the head receives any impression from this movement; for, when the leg falls suddenly down, and the head sinks at the same time, this motion is generally made to give a speedy relief to the other leg, which is not strong enough alone to support the whole weight of the body. This is a very great defect in a horse. It is also worthy of remark, that when he rests on his heels, it is a sign of weakness*; and when he supports himself on his toes, it is an unnatural and fatiguing attitude, which the horse cannot long continue.

Walking, though the slowest of all motions, ought to be brisk, light, and neither too long nor too short. Lightness depends much on the freedom of the shoulders, and is distinguished by the manner in which the horse, in walking, carries his head. If he carries his head high and steady, he is generally vigorous and light. When the movement of the shoulders is not sufficiently free, the limbs are not lifted high enough, and the horse is apt to stumble upon the road. In walking, a horse should raise his shoulders, and lower his haunches†. He should also elevate

* The only sure mark of strength and soundness in a horse, is when he rests firmly upon his foot, without favouring any particular part of it.

† It may be of use to introduce here an explanation of the technical terms generally employed to express the different external parts of a horse. See the plate of the horse.

A The two bones corresponding to the temples of a man, and called by the same name.

B The eye-pits, or two cavities between the eye and ear, above the eye-brows.

C The Vives. The parotid glands, situated between the ear, and the locking of the under jaw.
D The Face or Chanfrin. The fore part of the head from the eyes to the nostrils.
E The Rim of the Nostrils. The cartilage which forms the circular aperture of the nostrils, and terminates them above and below.
F Tip of the Nose. The partition which divides the nostrils, terminating at the upper lip.
G to H The bones of the lower jaw.
H The Chin.
I The Beard.
Gatherers. The two fore teeth.
Middle teeth. Those adjoining to the gatherers.
Corner teeth. The last on each side.
Tushes. The two canine teeth on each side, and in each jaw.
Bars. The spaces between the cutting teeth and grinders, filled with ridges, which run across the palate.
K The Neck, which is bounded above by the mane, and below by the throat, extending from the shoulders to the head.
L The Tuft or Toupet. That part of the mane which lies between the two ears, and hangs down on the front.
M The Withers. The place where the two shoulders approach each other between the neck and back.
N The Shoulders, extending from the withers M, to the top of the fore hand, or fore leg O.
P The Chest or breast.
Q The Back, reaching from the withers M, to the reins S.
R The Navel. The part between the back and reins; a very absurd term, as the navel is in the lower part of the belly.
S The Reins. This term is often used, though improperly, to express the whole spine of the horse.
T The Sides, which are formed and limited by the ribs.
V The Coffer. The hollow formed by the contour of the ribs. The name Belly is given to the part extending from V to the flank.
X The Flanks. The extremity of the belly, at the termination of the ribs, below the kidneys, and reaching to the haunch bones.
Y The Haunch, formed as in man, by the haunch-bone.
Z The Crupper, which is round, and reaches from the kidneys to the tail.

The Tail is distinguished by two parts, the hair and the rump.
a The Buttocks, are situated below the crupper and the origin of the tail, and extend to the place where the hind-leg joins the body.
b The Shoulder-blade.
c The humerus. Both of these are included by horsemen under the name of Shoulder.
d The Elbow.
e The Arm.
f The Knee or joint, situated below the arm, a term improperly applied to a horse, as it corresponds to the wrist in man.
g The Shank or Canon. The second part of the fore leg. It begins at the articulation of the knee, terminates at the fetlock joint i, and answers to the metacarpus in man.
h The Tendon, commonly called the back sinew.
i The Fetlock joint.
k The Tuft of hair which surrounds a kind of soft horn situated behind the shank.
l The Pasterus. The part of the leg which extends from the fetlock-joint to the hoof.
m The Coronet. The place where the hoof joins the leg, and is decorated with long hair falling down all around the hoof.
n The Hoof represents the nail in man; the fore part of it n is called the Toe, and the sides o the Quarters. The hind-part of the hoof is a little raised, and divided into two parts, both included under the name Heel; they extend to the middle of the under part of the foot, and uniting again under the sole, or bottom of the foot, form the Frog.
p The Stiffle, is properly the articulation of the knee, and contains the knee-pan.
q The Thigh. It extends from the stiffle and extremity of the buttocks to the ham r, and answers to the leg in man. Accordingly, the horse's thigh has a fleshy part s, resembling the calf of a human leg.
t The Hock or Ham, is the joint at the extremity of the thigh, and bends forward. This articulation corresponds with the Tarsus in man. The hinder-part of the joint called the hock, is properly the Heel. What is commonly becomes hard, and he is good for nothing but state and parade.

But lightness is not the only good quality in the movements of the horse: they should likewise be equal and uniform both before and behind: For, if the crupper vibrates when the shoulders are supported, his motion will be jolting and incommodious to the rider. The same thing happens, when the horse lengthens so much the step of the hind-leg, that the foot lights beyond the print of the fore-foot. Horses with short bodies are subject to this fault. Those whose legs cross each other, or hew, have an unsteady motion; and, in general, long-bodied horses are most commodious to the rider, because he is placed at a greater distance from the two centers of motion, the shoulders and haunches, and is of course less jolted.

The general mode of walking among quadrupeds is to lift, at one time, a fore-leg and a hind-leg of opposite sides. As their bodies rest on four points which form an oblong square, the most commodious manner of moving is to change two at a time in the diagonal; so that the centre of gravity of the animal's body may always remain nearly in the direction of the two points of support which are not in motion. In the three natural movements of the horse, namely, the walk, the trot, and the gallop, this mode is always observed, though with some variations. In walking there are four beats or times of moving; if the right fore-leg moves first, the left hind-leg instantly follows; then the left fore-leg moves, and is instantly followed by the right hind-leg. Thus the right fore-foot rests first on the ground, then the left hind-foot, next the left fore-foot, and, lastly, the right hind-foot, which makes a motion consisting of four beats and three intervals, of which the first and third are shorter than the middle one. In the trot, there are only two beats: if the right fore-leg parts from the ground, it is accompanied, at the same time, by the left hind-leg; then the left fore-leg moves at the same time with the right hind-leg; so that, in this motion, there are but two beats and one interval; the right fore-leg and the left hind-leg rests on the ground at the same time, and the same thing happens with regard to the left fore-leg and the right hind-leg. In the gallop, there are commonly three beats: the left hind-leg moves first and rests first on the ground: then the right hind-leg is raised along with the left fore-leg, and both rest on the ground at the same time; and, lastly, the right fore-leg is raised instantly after the left fore-leg and the right hind-leg, and falls last upon the ground. Thus, in the gallop, monly called the great sinew, which arises from the point of the hock, and terminates in the foot, is a tendon, answering to the tendo Achillis inserted into the human heel.

u The Shank.
x The Pastern-joint.
y The Pasterns.
z The Foot, as in the fore-leg.

This explanation of the particular terms, will render the general ones more easy and simple. A horse is divided into three principal parts, the fore-hand, the body, or carcase, and the hind-hand. The fore-hand includes the head, neck, withers, breast, and fore-legs. The body is composed of the back, kidneys, ribs, belly, and flanks. The hind-hand comprehends the rump, haunches, tail, buttocks, stiffle, thighs, hocks, and the other parts of the hind-legs.

By another mode of division, the horse is distinguished into four parts, the head, the body, and the fore and hind trains. The body is composed of the back, the kidneys, the belly, the ribs, and the flanks. The fore-train consists of the neck, the shoulders, the breast, and the fore-legs; and the hind train, of the rump, the tail, the haunches, and the hind-legs.

gallop, there are three beats and two intervals: in the firſt interval, when the motion is quick, the four legs, for an inſtant, are in the air at the ſame time, and the four ſhoes appear at once. When the horſe has ſupple limbs and haunches, and moves with agility, the gallop is moſt perfect, and the feet fall at four times; firſt, the left hind-leg, then the right hind-leg, next the left-fore leg, and, laſtly, the right fore-leg.

AGRICULTURE.

FIRST REPORT FOR AUGUST.

THE Corn Harveſt throughout the iſland, we are concerned to ſtate, is generally unpromiſing: ſcarce a diſtrict but has ſuffered ſeverely by the blight, or mildew; and the inceſſant rains have added to the calamity, by ſpearing a conſiderable part of the beſt Wheats, which, in many counties, ſtill remain on the ground. The country markets are rapidly advancing, particularly for old ſamples; the new Wheats already thraſhed out, have riſen very moderately, and are lean, and coarſe; the lateneſs of harveſting has added a fortnight's further conſumption of the old ſtock; ſo that ſhould the new Corn come from the flail ſlowly, which it is feared will be the caſe, the London market muſt, for ſome time at leaſt, be ſcantily ſupplied.

The Oats and Barleys, which are, on the avarage, large in bulk, have ſuffered much from the ſeverity of the weather, but few ſamples of the former will be bright, and the latter muſt prove coarſe, and not of a good malting quality. —Beans, Peaſe, and Tares are a better general crop than was expected.—The Rye, though far from being ſtrong, proves light in the ear.—The plants of Clover, for ſeed, promiſes a fair crop in very few places; in the Home Counties they are thin, and the heads much infected by the maggot.—The young Clovers are every where plentiful and thriving.—Turnips are good plants, particularly in Norfolk and Suffolk: in Eſſex and Kent they have partially failed.—The latter-math Hay, in the vicinity of London, has ſuffered by the rains as much as the firſt produce.

The Fallows, except thoſe under ſuperior huſbandry, are fouler than we remember to have ſeen them for many ſeaſons paſt.—The Hop-plantations, which are about to commence picking, will fall very ſhort of the eſtimated duty; the lower branches of the bine, even in the moſt promiſing grounds are found totally defective.—The Wool trade has rather declined from the laſt month's prices.—Smithfield continues but ſcantily ſupplied with good meat of any kind; and therefore the prices of all are rather higher than in our laſt month's Report.—Lean cattle are even dearer in proportion than the fat ſtock.—Sheep and Lambs are ſomewhat more reaſonable.—Horſes are ſtill ſo cheap that thoſe of an inferior quality are not ſaleable at any price!

SECOND REPORT FOR AUGUST.

The unſettled and ſtormy weather, which has continued during the whole of the month, diminiſhes much of the favourable opinion given in our laſt, relative to the ultimate produce of the Harveſt.

Our reports from North Britain ſtate, that little or no Grain has yet been cut, except a few patches of Poliſh and Dutch Oats; and that the the greater part of the Wheats, and latter sown barleys, are so lodged, or laid, as to promise a very light produce. In the Northern districts of South Britain, the Wheat and Oats are generally esteemed a short crop, and the Barley a good one: perhaps, indeed, the same conclusion may be formed respecting the crops of the whole island. We have, however, the satisfaction to state, that in the Midland and Southern counties, the harvest is described as very forward, and very abundant.

Much of the early Grass, Clovers, &c. were materially injured, and considerable quantities reduced even to a caput mortuum by the long exposure to the series of wet weather. On the backward cold grounds, the farmer has, however, been more fortunate, and the crops of those articles have proved so good that, on the whole, a reduction of price may be expected.

Turnips, except in some parts of North Britain, and in cold soils, wear universally the most promising appearance.

In Kent, the Hops possess a most promising aspect. The Apples in this county, were destroyed by an early blight.

Wheat, in consequence of the unfavourable continuance of the weather, has advanced in the markets: In Mark-lane, the last market-day, it experienced a rise of upwards of 3s. The average of England and Wales, by the last return is, for Wheat, 52s. 3d. for Barley, 25s. 8d.

The prices of cattle and sheep continue stationary. In Smithfield, Beef averages from 3s. 6d. to 4s. 2d. per stone of eight pounds, and Mutton from 3s. 8d. to 4s. 2d.

In our former Volumes many interesting particulars of celebrated Racers may be found, and some of Eclipse and his progeny, but none so accurate as the following, copied from a broad-side lately printed by Mr. Hucklebridge, of Salisbury.

THE PEDIGREE, PERFORMANCE, and PRODUCE, of the famous RUNNING HORSE ECLIPSE.

ECLIPSE was bred by his Royal Highness William, Duke of Cumberland, and was foaled during the great eclipse that happened on the 1st day of April, 1764, from which circumstance he took his name. He was never beat, nor ever paid a forfeit, and was allowed by all ranks of Sportsmen to be the fleetest and best horse that ever ran in the world, either before or since the time of Flying Childers. Eclipse was got by Mask, son of Squirt, a son of Bartlett's Childers, (own brother to Flying Childers) which was got by the Darley Arabian. Eclipse's dam, Spiletta, (dam also of Garrick and Proserpine) was purchased by his Royal Highness of the late Sir Robert Eden, Bart. and was got by Regulus, son of the Godolphin Arabian: his grandam (called Mother Western) by Smith, son of Snake, brother to Williams's Squirrel, that won the King's guineas at York, in 1725. His great grandam, by Lord D'Arcey's Old Montague, out of a daughter of Old Hautboy, and she out of a daughter of Brimmer. After the Duke's decease, Eclipse became the property of Mr. Wildman, and in 1769, won the maiden plate of 50l. at Epsom, beating four others; —they were all together at the three mile post, notwithstanding which he distanced the whole four. He also won 50l. at Ascot Heath, beating Cream-de-Barb. —The King's plate at Winchester, chester, at 12st. though only 5 yrs old, beating five others, two of which were distanced. He walked for the 50l. for 5 yrs old, at Winchester, and the King's plate at Salisbury; and the day after, won the City Bowl, with 30 guineas added thereto, beating Sulphur; afterwards he started alone for the King's plate at Canterbury—won the King's plates at Lewes and Litchfield, and at Newmarket in April, 1770. Eclipse beat Mr. Wentworth's Bucephalus, 8st.7lb. each, over the Bacon course: Mr. Wildman staked 600 guineas to 400 guineas, after which he was purchased by Mr. O'Kelly, in whose possession he won the King's plate at Newmarket, beating Mr. Bland's Diana, Mr. Strode's Pensioner, and two others: the odds at starting were ten to one on Eclipse, and, after the first heat, six and seven to four that he distanced Pensioner, which he did with great ease; after which he walked over for the King's plates at Guildford, Nottingham, and York; and also won the great subscription of 319l. 10s. at York, beating the famous horses Tortoise and Bellario, with great ease.—He afterwards walked over for the King's plate at Lincoln; and at Newmarket, in October, he won the 150 guineas, for 6 yrs old and aged horses (Mr. O'Kelly paying 100 guineas entrance) beating Sir Charles Bunbury's Corsican—the odds were seventy to one on Eclipse; and on the following day he walked over for the King's plate there, which was the last time of his starting.

He died at Mr. O'Kelly's, at Cannons, near Edgware, in Middlesex, the 26th day of February, 1789, aged near 25 years. His heart weighed thirteen pounds.

Eclipse was sire of the dam of the very famous horse, Phænomenon; and also of the 162 following truly capital racers and winners, and no less capital breeders, as their progeny fully proves.

He was a beautiful light chesnut, with a blaze down his face, and his off leg behind white quite up to the hock, and about fifteen hands and an half high.

To the EDITOR of the SPORTING MAGAZINE.

SIR,

IN the name of the Sporting world at large, I presume to thank your correspondent for "his Dream," of "The Horse's Expostulation with his Master," in your Magazine for June last; as well as to solicit his kind communications in future; for where the subject is so clearly understood, and so perfectly unembellished from the recital of "a Dream" only, much advantageous information may be derived from a continuation of the subject, when emancipated from the shackles of the slumbering deity.

With great respect, believe me,

Your constant reader,

CANDIDUS.

The CHACE, a POEM. By William Somerville, Eſq.

A T laſt within the narrow plain confin'd,
A liſted field, mark'd out for bloody deeds,
An amphitheatre more glorious far
Than ancient Rome could boaſt, they crowd in heaps,
Diſmay'd, and quite appall'd. In meet array
Sheath'd in refulgent arms, a noble band
Advance; great lords of high imperial blood,
Early reſolv'd t' aſſert their royal race,
And prove by glorious deeds their valour's growth
Mature, ere yet the callow down has ſpread
Its curling ſhade. On bold Arabian ſteeds
With decent pride they ſit, that fearleſs hear
The lion's dreadful roar; and down the rock
Swift-ſhooting plunge, or o'er the mountain's ridge
Stretching along, the greedy tyger leave
Panting behind. On foot their faithful ſlaves
With javelins arm'd attend; each watchful eye
Fix'd on his youthful care, for him alone
He fears, and to redeem his life, unmov'd
Would loſe his own. The mighty Aurengzebe,
From his high elevated throne, beholds
His blooming race; revolving in his mind
What once he was, in his gay ſpring of life,
When vigour ſtrung his nerves. Parental joy
Melts in his eyes, and fluſhes in his cheeks.
Now the loud trumpet ſounds a charge. The ſhouts
Of eager hoſts, thro' all the circling line,
And the wild howlings of the beaſts within
Rend wide the welkin, flights of arrows, wing'd
With death, and javelins launch'd from ev'ry arm,
Gall ſore the brutal bands, with many a wound
Gor'd thro' and thro'. Deſpair at laſt prevails,
When fainting nature ſhrinks, and rouſes all
Their drooping courage. Swell'd with furious rage,
Their eyes dart fire; and on the youthful band
They ruſh implacable. They their broad ſhields
Quick interpoſe; on each devoted head
Their flaming falchions, as the bolts of Jove,
Deſcend unerring. Proſtrate on the ground
The grinning monſters lie, and their foul gore
Defiles the verdant plain. Nor idle ſtand
The truſty ſlaves; with pointed ſpears they pierce
Thro' their tough hides; or at their gaping mouths
An eaſier paſſage find. The king of brutes
In broken roarings breathes his laſt; the bear
Grumbles in death; nor can his ſpotted ſkin
Tho' ſleek it ſhine, with varied beauties gay,
Save the proud pard from unrelenting fate.
The battle bleeds, grim Slaughter ſtride along,
Glutting her greedy jaws, grins o'er her prey.
Men, horſes, dogs, fierce beaſts of ev'ry kind,
A ſtrange promiſcuous carnage, drench'd in blood,
And heaps on heaps amaſs'd. What yet remain
Alive, with vain aſſault contend to break
Th' impenetrable line. Others, whom fear
Inſpires with ſelf-preſerving wiles, beneath
The bodies of the ſlain for ſhelter creep.
Aghaſt they fly, or hide their heads diſpers'd.
And now perchance (had heav'n but pleas'd) the work
Of death had been complete; and Aurengzebe
By one dread frown extinguiſh'd half their race.
When lo! the bright ſultanas of his court
Appear, and to his raviſh'd eyes diſplay
Thoſe charms, but rarely to the day reveal'd.

Lowly they bend, and humbly ſue, to ſave
The vanquiſh'd hoſt. What mortal can deny
When ſuppliant beauty begs? At his command
Leave a large void for their retreating foes.
Away they fly, on wings of fear upborne,
To ſeek on diſtant hills their late abodes.

Ye proud oppreſſors, whoſe vain hearts exult
In wantonneſs of pow'r, 'gainſt the brute race,
Fierce robbers like yourſelves, a guiltleſs war

Wage

Wage uncontroll'd: here quench your thirst of blood;
But learn from Aurengzebe to spare mankind.

BOOK III.

IN Albion's isle, when glorious Edgar reign'd,
He wisely provident, from her white cliffs
Launch'd half her forests, and with num'rous fleets
Cover'd his wide domain: there proudly rode
Lord of the deep, the great prerogative
Of British monarchs. Each invader bold,
Dane and Norwegian, at a distance gaz'd,
And disappointed, gnash'd his teeth in vain.
He scour'd the seas, and to remotest shores
With swelling sails the trembling corsair fled.
Rich commerce flourish'd; and with busy oars
Dash'd the resounding surge. Nor less at land
His royal cares; wise, potent, gracious prince!
His subjects from their cruel foes he sav'd,
And from rapacious savages their flocks.
Cambria's proud king's (tho' with reluctance) paid
Their tributary wolves; head after head,
In full account, till the woods yield no more,
And all the rav'nous race extinct is lost.
In fertile pastures, more securely graz'd
The social troops; and soon their large increase
With curling fleeces whiten'd all the plains.
But yet, alas! the wily fox remain'd,
A subtle, pilf'ring foe, prowling around
In midnight shades, and wakeful to destroy.
In the full fold, the poor defenceless lamb,
Seiz'd by his guileful arts, with sweet warm blood
Supplies a rich repast. The mournful ewe,
Her dearest treasure lost, thro' the dun night
Wanders perplex'd, and darkling bleats in vain:
While in th' adjacent bush, poor Philomel,
(Herself a parent once, till wanton churls
Despoil'd her nest) joins in her loud laments,
With sweeter notes and more melodious woe.

For these nocturnal thieves, huntsman, prepare
Thy sharpest vengeance. Oh! how glorious 'tis
To right th' oppress'd, and bring the felon vile
To just disgrace! Ere yet the morning peep,
Or stars retire from the first blush of day,
With thy far-echoing voice alarm thy pack,
And rouse thy bold compeers. Then to the copse,
Thick with entangling grass, or prickly furze,
With silence lead thy many-colour'd hounds,
In all their beauty's pride. See! how they range
Dispers'd, how busily this way and that,
They cross, examining with curious nose
Each likely haunt. Hark! on the drag I hear
Their doubtful notes, preluding to a cry
More nobly full, and swell'd with ev'ry mouth.
As struggling armies at the trumpet's voice,
Press to their standard; hither all repair,
And hurry thro' the woods; with hasty step
Rustling, and full of hope; now driv'n on heaps
They push, they strive; while from his kennel sneaks
The conscious villain. See! he skulks along,
Sleek at the shepherd's cost, and plump with meals
Purloin'd. So thrive the wicked here below,
Tho' high his brush he bear, tho' tip't with white
It gaily shine; yet ere the sun declin'd
Recall the shades of night, the pamper'd rogue
Shall rue his fate revers'd; and at his heels
Behold the just avenger, swift to seize
His forfeit head, and thirsting for his blood.

Heav'n's! what melodious strains! how beat our hearts
Big with tumultuous joy! the loaded gales
Breathe harmony; and as the tempest drives
From wood to wood, thro' ev'ry dark recess
The forest thunders, and the mountains shake.
The chorus swells; less various, and less sweet
The trilling notes, when in those very groves,
The feather'd choristers salute the spring,
And ev'ry bush in concert joins; or when
The master's hand, in modulated air,
Bids the loud organ breathe, and all the pow'rs
Of music in one instrument combine,
An universal minstrelsy. And now
In vain each earth he tries, the doors are barr'd
Impregnable, nor is the covert safe;

He pants for purer air. Hark! what loud shouts
Re-echo thro' the groves! he breaks away,
Shrill horns proclaim his flight. Each straggling hound
Strains o'er the lawn to reach the distant pack.
'Tis triumph all and joy. Now, my brave youths,
Now give a loose to the clean gen'rous steed;
Flourish the whip, nor spare the galling spur;
But in the madness of delight, forget
Your fears. Far o'er the rockly hills we range,
And dangerous our course; but in the brave
True courage never fails. In vain the stream
In foaming eddies whirls; in vain the ditch
Wide-gaping threatens death. The craggy steep
Where the poor dizzy shepherd crawls with care,
And clings to ev'ry twig, gives us no pain;
But down we sweep, as stoops the falcon bold
To pounce his prey. Then up th' opponent hill,
By the swift motion flung, we mount aloft:
So ships in winter-seas now sliding sink
Adown the steepy wave, then toss'd on high
Ride on the billows, and defy the storm.

Account of the GAME of LOO.

THE game is very simple of itself, as it may be learned by a child of twelve years old, in half an hour; but, however, to those who are unacquainted with Loo, it will be necessary to give some idea how this game is played.

There are two ways of playing at this game, the most common is with five cards, which are dealt from the whole pack, first three and then two, or one at a time, which ever the company agree on. Six or seven persons may play at once, but a greater number can be admitted when it is played with three cards only. When five cards are dealt to each person, a card is turned up, which is trumps: the knave of this suit is the highest card, which is called palm, the ace is next in value, and the others in succession the same as at Whist. Each person has the liberty of changing as many of his cards as he thinks proper, or throwing up his hand in order to run no risque of being looed. If any person play their cards either with or without changing, and do not make a trick, they are what is called looed, and each obliged to put down a stake for the good of the table, to be divided amongst the winners at the ensuing deal, according to the tricks which are made by each of them. If, for instance, six persons are at play, and each person puts in three shillings when he deals, every trick is entitled to sixpence, and whoever is then looed puts down three shillings, exclusive of his deal, sometimes it is agreed for each person who is looed to pay the whole sum which happens to be down at the time when he is looed; but this is according to agreement. Five cards of the same suit are called a flush, and cannot be won only by another superior flush, or by the person who is elder hand to the dealer. When it is played with three cards, palm and flushes are omitted. This is the most simple way of playing the game, and in general most money is sported when it is so played, it being more expeditious and much more lively.

LORD GROSVENOR.

LORD GROSVENOR after an unequalled success of thirty years upon the turf, finds, in winding up the debtor and creditor account, that he is 300,000l. minus, and has therefore prudently determined upon a transfer of his Stud with all possible expedition; but this this step has been unluckily adopted, at a moment when the secrets have all transpired, and the sport seems divested of all its former fascinating attractions. What is the lesson held out by this change, to the more serious and reflecting part of mankind? Why, what has been long known to, and seen by, every candid and impartial observer in the kingdom, that the most splendid opulence, the most unlimitted experience, and the best studs in Europe, can never stand against the complicated villainy, and studied depredation of training grooms, jockies, helpers, hangers on, and the long lists of collateral harpies, it is impossible for gentlemen of the above description to avoid; and who individually, conjunctively, and professionally, prey upon the credulity, and inexperience of juvenile and speculative adventurers. So well convinced of this truth, are the oldest and most experienced sportsmen, that Messrs. Ogden, Belson, Clarke, Twycross, Cauty, O'Hara, Tetherington, &c., &c. who some few years since kept so many in training, have now scarcely a single horse amongst them.

Curious Particulars concerning WILD CATS in BRITAIN.

THE dog is thought to be an indigenous animal of this island, as we find mention made of British dogs in the most early accounts we have of the country: but it is not so with the cat, as appears from the laws of Hoel D'da, who died A. D. 948, where a considerable value is put upon them, and the property of them secured by penalties.

As the cat is a beast of prey, and particularly fond of birds, the creature is apt to stroll into the fields, and, if it meets with success there, will often become wild, without returning home. Hence came a breed of wild cats here, which were formerly an object of sport to huntsmen. Thus Gerrard Camville, 6 John, had special licence to hunt the hare, fox, and wild cat, throughout all the King's forest; and 23 Henry III. William Earl Warren, by giving Simon de Pierpoint, a goshawk, obtained leave to hunt, the buck, doe, hart, hind, hare, fox, goat, cat, or any other wild beast, in certain lands of Simon's.

But it was not for diversion or sport alone, that this animal was pursued in chace, for the skin was of value, being much used by the Nuns in their habits as a fur. Hence, in Archbishop's William Corboyl's Canons, anno 1127. art. 10. it is ordained, "That no Abbess or Nun use more costly apparel, than such as is made of lambs, or cat's skins." But their furs, I am told, are more valuable in North America.

The wild cat is now almost lost in England, but is described by Mr. Pennant, I. p. 47. And as no other part of the creature but the skin was ever of any use here, it grew into a proverb, that you can have nothing of a cat but her skin.

STALLIONS.

THE sporting world are the best enabled to decide upon the following fact, as a matter of chance, or the effect of judgment: A gentleman being accidentally at Capt. Parker's sale at Yatley, in Hants, purchased the stallion, Noble (by Highflyer) for sixteen Pounds or Guineas, who we are informed lately sold him for ninety to a nobleman then upon a visit at the Marquiss of Blandford's, at Bill Hill, in Berkshire. This may be termed, winning to a certainty."

Upon the subject of Stallions it may not be inapplicable to observe, we we have been told Mr. Taplin has now one in possession, (in which is centered an accumulation of the most esteemed blood in the kingdom) Fulminano, got by Eclipse, dam by Herod, grand dam by Matchem, great dam by Regulus, out of an own sister to the Ancaster Starling, and that he is to cover next season at Maidenhead Thicket; previous to which, if so, we hope to give his portrait, and annex his history, which, we are informed, will be found as extraordinary and replete with mystery, as the circumstance of the famous "Place Mare," well known to have been selected (or in plainer terms stolen) from the stud, by Mr. Place, of Dimsdale, (Stud-master to Oliver Cromwell) who kept her concealed in a cellar, till the search was over.

EXECUTION of a WRIT of ENQUIRY, before the Sheriff of Middlesex, in a cause

BODDINGTON v. BODDINGTON,

For criminal Conversation with the Plaintiff's Wife. The Defendant having suffered judgment to go by default in the Court of King's Bench, a Special Jury was impannelled at the Sessions-House, Clerkenwell, on Friday, to assess the damages. The damages were laid at FIFTY THOUSAND POUNDS.

MR. Erskine, as leading Counsel for the plaintiff, Mr. Sam. Boddington, opened the case, and, after expatiating with his usual eloquence on the enormity of the crime of adultery and seduction, which, he said, struck at the root and foundation of society, especially where there were children, as in the present case, and of which charges the Defendant, Mr. Benj. Boddington, had admitted the truth, by suffering judgment to go by default, proceeded to state the particular circumstances attending it, which, he contended, united in themselves the most shocking instance of depravity that ever entered the human mind; the defendant not only being partner with the plaintiff in a very extensive mercantile concern, but his first cousin. They were the children of two brothers. The defendant, under the sacred mask of friendship, abused the confidence reposed in him, and by various acts contaminated the mind of Mrs. Boddington, a lady who, previous to this unhappy and fatal error, bore the most unblemished character, and who, besides possessing a most beautiful person and elegant accomplishments, was remarked for the exemplary manner in which she discharged the duties of a wife and mother. The unfortunate lady in question is a daughter of a Mr. Ashburner, a gentleman of some consequence in Bombay, who sent her over here at an early age for education, and, when she had acquired all the requisites to adorn her sex, directed that she should return to Bombay, which was to have taken place in the year 1790, and she was actually on board the ship for that purpose, when his client, Mr. S. Boddington, who had been some time deeply enamoured of her, and almost reduced to a state of despair by the thoughts of losing her, followed her on board the vessel then at Gravesend, and having obtained the consent of her Guardians in England to await the fiat of her father for their union, persuaded her to return; which was no hard task, as the love each other bore was then reciprocal. A period of ten months elapsed before the wished-for letter came, containing her father's consent sent, and approbation of her choice, and on which the union took place, the lady having 5000l. settled on her by her father, and the like sum by Mr. Boddington. Two children were the fruits of this marriage, and they continued to enjoy the most uninterrupted felicity till a short time previous to Mrs. Boddington's elopement with the defendant, which took place the beginning of June last, and which was conducted in such a way as to shew that it was a premeditated thing, and a deliberate plan of seduction laid down by the defendant, who had so overpowered the lady's reason as to make her forget the duties she owed to an honourable husband and her children, and to persuade her to elope with him. The means to effect this scheme were the most abominable on the part of the defendant. Mr. S. Boddington having observed something in his wife's conduct that gave him reason to suspect his honour was in danger, resolved to remove her for a time from the scene he dreaded, but did it in such a manner as not to create the least suspicion of the cause, either to his wife or friends, proposing a journey to Bath, and then to Wales. He parted with the defendant in the most cordial manner, little thinking that matters had proceeded so far as the result had proved. It was settled with the defendant that he was to return to town immediately, if business required his presence. A few days after he got to Bath, he received a letter from the defendant to the effect as under.

DEAR SIR,—The packet arrived this morning; and, as you said you were willing to come up, if necessary, I request you will, and be in town on Monday morning, to attend a meeting on the Exchequer Warrants. News is generally good here; funds rather better, &c.

This letter unfortunately had the desired effect, Mr. Boddington immediately setting off for town in the mail, leaving his wife at Bath. He must have been passed on the road by the defendant, who went thither and carried Mrs. Boddington away. On Mr. Boddington's arriving in town, he found the following letter left for him by the defendant:—

When we parted on Wednesday last, it was for the last time This night I go from London, never to return again. I have deceived you in sending for you to town, and wish I had not in other things; if you see my father, for God's sake break the matter to him by degrees. I have taken seven hundred pounds.

(Signed) BENJ. BODDINGTON.

Mr. Erskine, in very strong colours, then painted the enormity of the defendant's conduct throughout the whole transaction, and which, he hoped, would make such an impression on the minds of the Jury, when they heard the evidence which he should bring forward as to induce them not to mitigate the damages in the smallest degree. He said, that he was well aware of the defendant's intention by pleading guilty, and had himself opposed the matter coming into this Court for judgment, though he was certain their verdict would justify the decision of the Court of King's Bench, in not suffering it to be removed.

The first witness called was Mr. Thomas Green, an attorney, who being sworn, was examined by Mr. Serjeant Runnington. Mr. Green said, that Miss Ashburner, previous to her marriage with Mr. Samuel Boddington, was principally under his care; and that, when her father sent for her to Bombay, he, the witness, provided every thing necessary for the voyage, and saw her on board the vessel; but, on application being made to him by Mr. S. B. he consented to her coming ing on shore, and remaining in England till her father's will should be known respecting the intended marriage, and who sending his consent in about ten months after, the witness signed the marriage articles, and they were united; that he visited them frequently after, and conceived them to be extremely happy, and that the union was founded in love on both sides.—Cross-examined by Mr. Law. He said that he had no knowledge of Mr. B. Boddington, the defendant, though he believed he dined with him once: he said that Mrs. Boddington was married in Feb. 1792, is now about twenty-two years of age, and extremely beautiful and accomplished.

A lady of the name of Emerson, said, she had known Miss Ashburner (now Mrs. Boddington) when she was ten years of age, and had continued the intimacy ever since; that she considered her perfectly virtuous till this affair took place: she spoke of her as being extremely beautiful and attractive in her manners; and said, that, after she returned from on board the vessel at Gravesend, she was at the witness's house for some time, and then went to Mrs. Murray's school, at Kensington. The witness was present at the marriage, and conceived it to be the result of love on both sides, and that Mr. Boddington appeared to make an excellent husband. She knew Mr. B. Boddington very well, and had frequently seen him in company with the plaintiff and his wife. On her cross-examination by Mr. Law, she said, that she thought the defendant at times seemed to express too much attention and admiration to Mrs. Boddington, especially when they were not in mixed companies; which circumstance she once mentioned to Mrs. Boddington, about half a year before the separation took place; after which she thought Mrs. Boddington did not behave with her usual kindness to her husband.

Mr. Cline, surgeon, said, he had known Mr. S. Boddington for seven years; that he had frequently visited him after his marriage, and that he thought Mrs. Boddington appeared to be extremely attentive to her husband, and affectionate to her children, the eldest of whom was four, and the other two years of age. He had frequently dined with them, but never observed any thing particular in the behaviour of the defendant towards Mrs. Boddington.

Joseph Street, a clerk in the house of Messrs. Boddington, was examined. He described them to be West-India merchants, who traded to the amount of 300,000l. to 500,000l. per year. He said that the defendant was admitted a partner about three years ago; that for the first year he had only one-third share of the profits of the business, but for the two last he had four-ninths. He spoke of the great degree of happiness that appeared to subsist between the plaintiff and his wife till their separation, and described her to have always been extremely reserved in her behaviour. On being shewn the letters before alluded to, he declared them to be the defendant's writing, as were also the drafts for 200l. and 500l.—Cross-examined by Mr. Law. He does not know that the money the defendant had in the business was advanced by his father, or that he had any other source to resort to for money: he had frequently seen the defendant at his father's, and thought he behaved as a dutiful son; he heard of his return to town on Wednesday week following the elopement, and also that he had been seen wandering on Enfield Chace. He saw Mrs. Boddington once at the house in Mark-lane, after ſhe had left the defendant, and that ſhe came to ſee her children.—In anſwer to a queſtion from Mr. Erſkine, he declared that the plaintiff was not reconciled to his wife.

The evidence being gone through, Mr. Law, as advocate for the defendant, made a very able ſpeech in mitigation of damages, and in which he endeavoured to convince the Jury that the matter was not a premeditated thing on the part of his client, who, he ſaid, was very young, and inexperienced in the ways of the world. It was merely the very powerful effect of the Lady's charms, to the blaze of which he was conſtantly expoſed, from the frequent opportunities he had of being in her company, and which receiving no check, expanded till it broke out in the fever of diſtracted love, and led him to the commiſſion of an act that muſt for ever render him a miſerable outcaſt of ſociety. He had already forfeited every worldly benefit, and, if heavy damages were given, what muſt be the reſult? he muſt either periſh in a priſon, or the weight muſt fall on the innocent and unhappy father, with eight daughters to provide for. Mr. Law admitted that his client merited a ſevere puniſhment, but prayed that it might not be beyond his means of paying, which he declared, did not amount to more than 3000l. the ſum inveſted as his ſhare in the buſineſs being advanced by his father. After ſome other obſervations on his client's conduct, he concluded by entreating the Jury to tincture their juſtice with mercy, and only reward a fair retribution.

Mr. Burghall, the Under Sheriff, then ſummed up the evidence in a very clear and conciſe manner; and the Jury, after retiring out of Court for about twenty minutes, returned with a verdict of TEN THOUSAND POUNDS damages!

ARTIFICES of ANIMALS of the CHACE.

THE Roe-deer differs from the Stag in diſpoſition, manners, and in almoſt every natural habit. Inſtead of aſſociating in herds, they live in ſeparate families. The two parents and the young go together, and never mingle with ſtrangers. They are conſtant in their amours, and never unfaithful like the ſtag. The females commonly produce two fawns, the one a female, and the other a male. Theſe young animals, who are brought up and nouriſhed together, acquire a mutual affection ſo ſtrong, that they never part from each other. This attachment is ſomething more than love, for though always in company, they feel the rut but once in a year, and it continues only fifteen days. At this period the father drives off the fawns, as if he intended they ſhould yield their place to thoſe which are to ſucceed, in order to form new families for themſelves. After the rutting ſeaſon however is paſt, the fawns return to their mother, and continue with her ſome time longer; after which they ſeparate for ever, and remove to a diſtance from the place of their nativity. When about to bring forth, the female ſeparates from the male; and, to avoid the wolf, her moſt dangerous enemy, conceals herſelf in the moſt deepeſt receſſes of the foreſt. In a week or two, the fawns are able to follow her; when when threatened with danger, she hides them in a close thicket; and so strong is her parental affection, that to preserve her offspring from destruction, she presents herself to be chaced.

Hares possess, not like rabbits, the art of digging retreats in the earth; but they neither want instinct sufficient for their own preservation, nor sagacity for escaping their enemies. They form seats or nests on the surface of the ground, where they watch with the utmost vigilant attention, the approach of any danger. In order to deceive, they conceal themselves between clods of the same colour with that of their own hair. When pursued, they first run with rapidity, and then double or return upon their former steps. From the place of starting, the females run not so far as the males, but they double more frequently. Hares hunted in the place where they were brought forth, seldom remove to a great distance from it, but return to their form; and when chaced two days successively, on the second day they perform the same doublings they had practised the day before. When hares run out to a great distance, it is a proof that they are strangers; male hares especially, during the most remarkable period of rutting, which is in the months of January, February, and March, sometimes perform journies of several miles in quest of mates; but, as soon as they are started by dogs, they fly back to the place of their nativity. "I have seen a hare," Fouilloux remarks, "so sagacious, that after hearing the hunter's horn, he started from his form, and though at the distance of a quarter of a league, went to swim in a pool, and lay down on the rushes in the middle of it, without being chaced by the dogs. I have seen a hare, after running two hours before the dogs, push another from his seat, and take possession of it. I have seen others swim over two or three ponds, the narrowest of which was eighty paces broad. I have seen others, after a two hour's chace, run into a sheep-fold, and lie down among them. I have seen others, when hard pushed, run in among them, and would not leave them. I have seen others, after hearing the noise of the hounds, conceal themselves in the earth. I have seen others run up one side of a hedge, and return by the other, when there was nothing else between them and the dogs. I have seen others, after running half an hour, mount an old wall, six feet high, and clap down in a hole covered with ivy. Lastly, I have seen others swim over a river of about eighty paces broad, oftener than twice in the length of two hundred paces."

The Fox has, in all ages and nations, been celebrated for craftiness and address. Acute and circumspect, sagacious and prudent, he diversifies his conduct, and always reserves some art for unforeseen accidents. Though nimbler than the wolf, he trusts not to the swiftness of his course. He knows how to ensure safety, by providing himself with an asylum, to which he retires when danger appears. He is not a vagabond, but lives in a settled habitation, and in a domestic state. The choice of situation, the art of making and rendering a house commodious, and of concealing the avenues which lead to it, imply a superior degree of sentiment and reflection. The fox possesses these qualities, and employs them with dexterity and advantage. He takes up his abode on the border of a wood, and in the neighbourhood of cottages. Here he listens to the crowing of the cock, and the noise of the poultry; he scents them at a distance.

tance. He chooses his time with great wisdom and discretion. He conceals both his route and design. He moves forward with caution, sometimes even trailing his body, and seldom makes a fruitless expedition. When he leaps the wall, or gets in underneath it, he ravages the court-yard, puts all the fowls to death, and returns with his prey, which he either conceals under the herbage, or carries off to his kennel. In a short time he returns for another, which he carries off and hides in the same manner, but in a different place. In this manner he proceeds till the light of the sun, or some movements perceived in the house, admonish him it is time to retire to his den. He does much mischief to the bird-catchers. Early in the morning he visits their nets and their bird-lime, and carries off successively all the birds that happen to be entangled. The young hares he hunts in the plains, seizes old ones in their seats, digs out the rabbits in their warrens, finds out the nests of partridges, quails, &c. seizes the mothers on the eggs, and destroys a prodigious number of game. Dogs of all kinds spontaneously hunt the fox: though his odour be strong, they often prefer him to the stag or the hare. When pursued, he runs to his hole; and it is not uncommon to send in terriers to detain him till the hunters remove the earth from above, and either kill or seize him alive.

In Kamtschatka, the animals called gluttons, employ a singular stratagem for killing the fallow deer. They climb up a tree, and carry with them a quantity of that species of moss, of which the fallow deer are very fond. When a deer approaches near a tree, the glutton throws down the moss. If the deer stops to eat the moss, the glutton instantly darts down upon its back, and, after fixing himself firmly between the horns, tears out its eyes, which torments the animal to such a degree, that whether to put an end to its tortures, or to get rid of its cruel enemy, it strikes its head against the trees till it falls down dead. The glutton divides the flesh into convenient portions, and conceals them in the earth to serve for future provisions. The gluttons on the river Lena kill horses in the same manner.

Gaming-Houses.

It may be some sort of amusement to present our readers with the following List of Officers established in the most notorious gaming-houses, as far back as the year 1731. Since that period, the English nation, having made rapid advances towards improvement in every branch of Commerce, the Polite Arts, and Public Amusements, the Gaming-Houses of the present day, the resort of the whole world of Fashion, must undoubtedly have banished all persons of the following description, and established themselves on a much more polished and liberal plan:

1. A Commissioner, always a proprietor, who looks in of a night, and the week's account is audited by him, and two others of the proprietors.

2. A Director, who superintends the room.

3. An Operator, who deals the cards at a cheating game called Faro.

4. Two Crowpees, who watch the cards, and gather the money for the Bank.

5. Two Puffs, who have money given them to decoy others to play.

6. A Clerk, who is a check upon the puffs, to see that they sink none of the money that is given them to play with.

7. A Squib, who is a puff of lower rank, and serves at half salary, whilst he is learning to deal.

8. A Flasher, to swear how often the Bank has been stripped.

9. A Dunner, who goes about to recover money lost at play.

10. A Waiter, to fill out wine, snuff candles, and attend in the gaming room.

11. An Attorney, as Newgate Solicitor.

12. A Captain, who is to fight a Gentleman that is peevish for losing his money.

13. An Usher, who lights Gentlemen up and down stairs, and gives the word to the porter.

14. A Porter, who is generally a soldier of the Foot Guards.

15. An Orderly Man, who walks up and down outside of the door, to give notice to the porter, and alarm the house at the approach of the Constables.

16. A Runner, who is to get intelligence of the Justices meeting.

17. Link-boys, Coachmen, Chairmen, Drawers, or others, who bring the first intelligence of the Justices Meetings, or of the Constables being out, at half a guinea reward.

18. Common Bail, Affidavit Men, Ruffians, Bravoes, Assassins, multus cum aliis.

REMARKS on the GAME LAWS.

RURAL diverfions, when followed in a liberal manner, are particularly ufeful in this ifland; where, from the nature of our government, no man can be of confequence without fpending a large portion of his time in the country; and every additional inducement to this mode of life, is an additional fecurity to our freedom and independence. [With all deference to modern partriotifm, I humbly conceive it impoffible for him who is not individually free and independent to be politically fo; and individual freedom and independence never yet fell to the lot of extravagance, luxury, and diffipation.] I much queftion whether our morals, or even our manners, are greatly improved by that ftile of living, which empties our country feats to fill the metropolis, or the large provincial towns; and whether the manly character that once diftinguifhed the Englifhman, has not fuffered more on the fide of firmnefs and integrity, than it has gained on that of politenefs and elegance, by facrificing the rough fports of the field to the fofter amufements of the affembly and card table.

I know

I know the laws which are in force to preserve those animals, which are the objects of this diversion, are severely attacked by the sentimental novel writers of the present time; writers who, without invention, humour, or real knowledge of mankind, dress up some improbable tale with affected maxims of fine feeling and exquisite sensibility, and endeavour to weaken the hearts, inflame the passions, and mislead the understandings of the rising generation. These abound with horrid stories of the young and ingenious peasant torn from his weeping parents and distracted bride, and either hurried into a loathsome dungeon, or banished into an unhealthy climate, only for killing a hare or a partridge. But I will venture to say, there is hardly a day-labourer in the kingdom that may not, in a reasonable manner, be indulged with the use of these animals by a proper application; and if he is fond of the diversion they afford, and chooses to be idly busy, rather than industriously so, he may perfectly satisfy himself by attending the hounds or greyhounds of the 'squire, or assisting the game-keeper with his gun; but that laws should be made to prevent the man, whose family depends entirely on his labour for their support, from quitting his flail, his plough, or his spade, to range the woods for the destruction of animals, which afford a noble and manly diversion to their proprietor, I can conceive no more inconsistent with justice, than that he should be prevented from entering the orchard, or the hen-roost. As the beast of the forest, and the fruit of the soil, are equally common in a state of nature, so I see no reason why they may not be equally appropriated in a state of civil society. And I appeal to any person, really conversant in these kind of facts, if he knows a single instance of one of these men, commonly called Poachers (whose profession is a violation of the game laws, and against whom alone they are executed with any severity), whose character and sufferings could entitle him to a tear. While I am thus defending the general principle of the game laws, I do not stand forth as their champion in every respect; they want great alterations as to the objects both of their penalties and exemptions. That a man of one hundred pounds a year may destroy the game with impunity on any one's land, and that a person of ninety-nine shall be liable to pay five pounds for killing a hare on his own, is a solecism too evident to need a comment.

Pedigree and Performances of Rockingham.

ROCKINGHAM was bred by the late John Pratt, Esq. of Askrigg, in Wensleydale, Yorkshire, and was foaled in 1781.

Got by Highflyer out of Purity, (the dam of Archibald Fitzwilliam, St. Paul, &c.) by Matchem; gr. dam was Mr. Pratt's famous Old Squest Mare. Her dam (Lot's dam) by Mogul, Camilla, by Bay Bolton, Old Lady, Dam of Starling, by Pulleine's Chesnut Arab. Rockwood, Bustler. The Old Squest Mare, so well known to all sportsmen, was the dam of Virgin, Dido, Miracle, Miss Timms, (dam of Amelia) Maiden, (dam of Walnut, and gr. dam of Gohanna, Precipitate, and Caustick) Pumpkin, Rasselas, &c. &c.

In 1784, then called Camden, he won a stakes of 30gs at Nottingham.

In

In 1785—In the Second Spring Meeting, at Newmarket, he beat Capt. O'Kelly's Serjeant, 8st. 4lb. each B. C. Capt. O'Kelly staked 500gs to 400gs. Before the meeting 6 and 7 to 4 on Serjeant, but at the post 7 to 4 on Rockingham. Great betting, which turned out very favourable to the Yorkshire gentlemen. Mr. Pratt sold Rockingham to Mr. Wentworth, before starting, for 700gs.

On Wednesday he won the Jockey Club Plate, for 4 yr olds, 8st. R. C. beating Roscius, Denmark, Camel, Carlo Khan, and Pindar. 2 to 1 on Rockingham.

On Saturday he beat Hardwicke, 8st. 2lb. each, B. C. for 300gs. 6 to 4 on Hardwicke. Many thousands were bet upon this match. Mr. Wentworth then sold him to the Prince of Wales for 2000gs.

In May, at 8st. 7lb. beat Mr. Dowson's Clayhall, 8st. 2lb. B.C. 500gs. 5 to 2 on Rockingham.

In 1786.—In the Second Spring Meeting at Newmaket, he won 50l. D. C. carrying 8st. 6lb. Delpini, ditto; Clayhall, ditto; and George, 6 yrs old, 8st. 12lb. 9 to 4 on Rockingham.

In June, at Ascot Heath, he walked over for a sweepstakes of 40gs h. ft. for all ages, 4-miles: where he also walked over for the Ladies' Plate of 50l. for all ages, 2-mile heats. Mr. Bullock afterwards purchased him for 800gs at the Prince's sale.

In September, he won the King's plate, for 5 yr olds, 8st. 7lb. each, at 2 three-mile heats, beating Marplot.

At the First October meeting at Newmarket, he won 70gs. for all ages, B. C. beating Guyler. 8 to 1 on Rockingham.

On Thursday in the Second October Meeting, he won 70gs. D.I. carrying 8st. beating Oberon, 4 yrs old, carrying 7st. 4lb. Wilbram, 6 yrs old, 8st. 4lb. and Ulysses and Soldier, both aged, 8st. 6lb. each. 3 to 1 on Rockingham.

On Friday he won a stakes of 50gs each (14 subscribers) B. C. beating Chaunter, 4 yrs old, 7st. 7lb. and Drone and Latona, both aged, 9st. 2lb.

In 1787.—In the Craven Meeting he won the First year of a Subscription of 50gs h. ft. D. C. beating Fox, Oberon, and Pilot, all 4 yr olds, 7st. 13lb. each; Delpini, and Marplot, 5 yrs old, 8st. 7lb. and Drone, aged, 9st. Dungannon, Alexander, and 5 others pd ft.—7 to 4 agst Rockingham.

In the First Spring Meeting, he won 50l. R. C. beating Cowslip, 4 yrs old, 7st. 9lb. Collector and Noodle, 5 yrs old, 8st. 3lb. Challenger, 6 yrs old, and Patience, aged, 8st. 7lb. 5 to 1 he won. He was entered for 50l. for all ages. D.C. agst Woodcock, Rosina, &c. and recd. 25gs. to withdraw.

Next day he won the King's Plate for 6yr olds 12st. R.C. beating Clayhall, Roscius, and Quibler. 5 to 1 on Rockingham.

On Wednesday, in the Second Spring Meeting, carrying 8st. 12lb. he won the 140gs B. C. beating Skylark, 4yrs old, 7st. 12lb. 40 to 1 on Rockingham.

On Thursday, he won the Jockey Club Plate, carrying 8st. 7lb. each, B. C beating Drone. 5 to 2 on Rockingham.

In May, he won the King's Plate at Guildford, for 6 yr olds, 12st. 4-mile heats, beating St. Valori, who was drawn after the first heat. 4 to 1 on Rockingham.

In July, he won the King's Plate at Winchester, at 2 heats, beating Chaunter.

On the 14th of August, he won the King's Plate at Nottingham, beating Prince of Orange (late Clay-Clayhall) drawn after the first heat. 4 to 1 on Rockingham.

On the 20th of August, he won the King's Plate at York, 12st. 4-miles, beating Milch. 20 to 1 on Rockingham.

On the 23d, he won the Great Subscription of 251l. 15s. for 6 yrs old, 8st 10lb. and aged, 9st. 4 miles, beating Verjuice, 5 yrs old, Mark Antony, Harlequin Junior, and Roscius, 6 yrs old, and Faith, aged. 5 to 1 on Rockingham.

On Monday, on the first Newmarket October Meeting, he won 50l R. C. beating Macbeth, 4 yrs old, 7st 5lb. Roundelay and Oberon, 5 yrs old, 8st. and Ulysses, aged, 8st. 7lb. 5 to 1 on Rockingham.

On Wednesday, he won the renewed 140gs. B. C. carrying 8st. 12lb. beating Skylark, 4 yrs old, 7st. 7lb. High odds on Rockingham.

On Thursday he won the King's Plate, at 12st. R. C. beating Marplot. 6 to 1 on Rockingham.

The same day, he won the 70 gs B. C. carrying 8st. 11lb. beating Flyator, 4 yrs old, 7st. 4lb. Fox, Lepicq, Schoolboy, 5 yr olds, 8st. 5lb. each. 4 to 1 on Rockingham.

On Thursday, in the Second October Meeting, he won the 60 gs. D. I. carrying 8st. 4lb. beating Mufti, 4 yrs old, 7st. 4lb. 5 to 1 on Rockingham.

On Friday, he won a stakes of 5gs each, B. C. (14 subscribers) carrying 8st. 13lb. beating Scota, 4 yrs old, 7st. 7lb. 10 to 1 on Rockingham. This was his 16th time of winning in 1787, besides receiving 25gs to withdraw. After which Mr. Bullock sold him to Lord Barrymore, for 2500 gs.

In 1788.—In the First Spring Meeting at Newmarket, he walked over for the King's Plate, R.C.

In the Second Spring Meeting, he won the Jockey Club Plate, 8st. 7lb. each, B. C. beating Verjuice. 6 to 1 on Rockingham. At 8st. 12lb. (rode by Lord Barrymore) he beat Stargazer (rode by L. Jewison) 8st. 4lb. B. C. 300gs. 4 to 1 on Rockingham. This was the last time of his running.

Rockingham was one of the best horses that ever ran, and his performances in the year 1787, are not equalled by any horse upon the turf. He is sire of Arabella, Brown Bess, Bennington, Patriot, Susannah, &c. &c. Though he has had very few blood mares, yet it is very clear, from the performances of Bennington and Patriot, that if he had plenty of high bred mares to him, he would certainly be the first stallion in England.

OBSERVATIONS on the APPROACH of EGHAM RACES, 1797.

ON Tuesday next begin the RACES at Egham, upon that justly celebrated spot where the great Palladium of our Liberties, MAGNA CHARTA was exultingly wrested from the tyrannical prostitution of PRINCELY PREROGATIVE, by the persevering fortitude and incorruptible purity of BRITISH BARONS, who, stemming the torrent of ministerial contamination, rescued their country from the most abject slavery.

The TURF, it seems (from present appearances) fluctuates as much as other fashions, dependent entirely upon the caprice of the multitude, who without knowing the reason, or affording a moment for reflection, are eternally playing the

the juvenile game of "Follow the Leader." Of this we hold as ample proofs, the retrospective of a few years only, MAIDENHEAD (where DRIVER had his desperate struggles with AARON for superiority, and where Atom, Milksop, Brutus, Badger, and Gimcrack, have so often disputed the palm of victory) is totally abandoned, without the spirit or ability to raise a single plate. At READING, where Plates (after the most humiliating supplications through every part of the country to raise them) are promised, HORSES are never sent, nor do Sportsmen ever come; whilst EGHAM, so lately become (by its vicinity to the metropolis, and the proper compliment to Mr. Fox), the scene of celebrity, vies even with Epsom, in the opulence and popularity of its Stewards, the concourse of visitors, and certainty of sport, from the great body of distinguished characters, who run more for HONOUR, than influenced by profit. In proof, on Tuesday the sport consists of the Noblemens' Plate of 50l. the best of three four-mile heats. The Magna Charta Stakes of 10gs. each, and a Hunters' Sweepstakes, exclusive of a Match for 100gs. and horse for horse. On Wednesday a Plate and two Sweepstakes; and on Thursday a 50l. and a Sweepstakes of 10gs. each, for which six are named. With these attractions we entertain no doubt but every Inn will be full, every stall engaged, and not one bed empty. Having said thus much upon the score of seduction, it becomes directly applicable to add a word of advice by way of prevention, reminding our dashing friends and inexperienced Sportsmen, that those who game but little cannot possibly lose much; that those who go home early will be in the least danger of being robbed; as well as that those who drink least, will stand a fair chance of being at home first.

Observations after the Races.

Notwithstanding their high claims to priority, carried with them a great deal of that chilling frigidity which so evidently marks the present state of the turf. There was a great deal of running without sport—a great deal of noise without mirth—and a great deal of company (if countenances may be taken) for intelligence, without much individual gratification. Horses for both plates and sweepstakes were more numerous than could be expected, but the general flatness of the course, and the wintry breezes from the Thames, gave a gloominess to the whole, ill suited to the customary enjoyments of a horse race. For account of Races, see the Calendar.

Some ACCOUNT of CHINA.

SIR George Staunton (whose Narrative of the late Embassy is now published) and his fellow-travellers were eight months in China. They travelled by land and by water, that is, by canals, almost the whole extent of the Chinese empire, which is the eleventh part of the habitable globe. They had an opportunity of seeing and examining almost every thing that the country offers most curious, being continually accompanied by several persons of the highest dignity and authority in the Empire, who had it in charge, that every degree of attention and respect should be shewn to them. They were provided with every accomodation during during their travels at the Emperor's expence.

The war, which broke out with France, making it necessary that the Lion man of war should convoy fifteen sail of British vessels, containing several millions of property, from China, obliged them to return sooner than was originally intended; but not, however, until the Emperor had testified his desire of receiving a new Embassy, whenever it might be agreeable to the British Court.

The populousness of China amounts to 333 millions, of which the province of Pekin alone contains 38. But that capital, which is estimated by the Jesuit Grimaldi at 16 millions, does not contain above three millions. The whole Empire, however, is nearly three times as populous as Europe: whereas its revenues, reckoned in silver, hardly exceed three times those of Great Britain.

The Chinese are far inferior to the Europeans in scientific knowledge; but they greatly resemble the French de la vieille Cour, in vivacity and urbanity, in overweening conceit of themselves, and in manifest airs of conscious superiority over strangers with whom they converse. They value and cultivate arts only in proportion to their utility.

The exuberant populousness of China exercises human ingenuity in contriving new, various, and extraordinary means for procuring food for so many mouths. The soil is cultivated with extraordinary attention; and even the mountains are terraced to the tops. Baskets and hurdles are covered with earth, which being planted with vegetables, form floating islands on the lakes and rivers.

The Chinese have no national religion. Women live in the same privacy, and act as insignificant a part in society as they do in Turkey, and other Mahommedan countries. The most wonderful thing in China is the uniting so many millions of people under the influence of regular government. This is facilitated by the authority of age and experience over youth and ignorance, which is established by the laws, and confirmed by the immemorial usages of China. Besides this, all offices in China are distributed according to merit. There is a perpetual competition in each district, in each province, as in the Court and capital. The dignity of the Emperor only is hereditary. All other Magistrates rise by due gradation, in consequence of examinations and comparative trials, resembling those by which academic degrees were formerly conferred in Europe.

The writing of China is understood by the Japanese, and several other nations who do not understand the Chinese language: because the Chinese characters denote things, and not merely words. Sir G. Staunton is the first writer we have met with, who clearly explains how letters came to be formed from hieroglyphics, and why the Chinese still prefer the use of the latter.

P. S. We shall in future numbers give some extracts from Sir G. Staunton's book, on the subjects most applicable to our work; such as Natural History, &c.

Theatricals.

THE Dublin Manager has taken leave of the Public by the following address:

TO THE PUBLIC.

After seventeen years of public life, in which Mr. Daly has met with with much individual as well as general kindnefs from the inhabitants of this City, he would deem himfelf wanting towards them if he now retired to a private fituation without expreffing his fenfe of fuch their often experienced favour and protection.

Mr. Daly ventured on the arduous tafk of conducting the Dublin Theatre with a ftrong feeling of his infufficiency, but with a proportionably zealous determination to make up in activity and induftry, what he might want in ability. He has had the fatisfaction to fee his endeavours rewarded by uniform and long continued approbation; and while, with unfeigned gratitude, he now pours forth his thanks to the public for their liberal acceptance of his fervice, he is proud to fay, that however the gentleman who has obtained his fituation may exceed him in the means or power of difcharging the duties of it, he never can in wifh and in zeal to contribute in the beft manner to their amufement, nor in the indelible attachment with which he now begs leave to fubfcribe himfelf, the public's obliged and devoted fervant,

For the SPORTING MAGAZINE.

To MR. D. JOHNSON, Huntsman, and MESSRS. RICHARDSON, NOTTAGE, GOSDEN, JEWELL, STARLING, &c. Yeomen Prickers of his Majesty's Stag Hounds.

GENTLEMEN,

IT cannot be unknown to you, that no small portion of prejudice has for years been entertained by those who call themselves Fox Hunters, against the sport which you are happily appointed to conduct, and which they ludicrously appellate, when compared with their own favourite chace Ass Hunting. Adverting with a proper degree of resentment to this contemptuous error in judgment, it is natural for me, who have stuck close to the skirts of you and your predecessors for thirty years past, to offer, through the medium of our sporting friend, the Editor, a few words to rescue both you and me from the apathy with which these juvenile Gentlemen of the Brush, so exultingly affect to overwhelm us. Feeling with, and for you, as I know you feel for yourselves, and experimentally convinced how little assistance we derive from those visiting gentry, when the hounds are to be stopt, or a deer taken, I do most earnestly entreat, for the honour of the forest, for the credit of our deer, and the unsullied reputation of the hounds, that we may have more bursts and less stops (his Majesty will kindly and condescendingly excuse such efforts of energy,) when we shall soon see how many of those sarcastic gentry will be at hand, to assist in "taking the calf:" convinced by long and attentive experience, that although any horse may follow, yet blood and blood only can go with the hounds. However, gentlemen, when the time shall arrive that I see those unfledged sportsmen in front, and our old staunch forest friends in the rear; or when I observe them dismounting to secure the deer, and save us the trouble, I shall then become a cheerful convert to their superiority in speed and bottom; 'till when, I shall occasionally beg permission of the Editor, to trouble you with a few comparative animadversions upon the two distinct chaces, as well as the countries they are enjoyed in, during the ensuing season, being, with equal respect and sincerity,

Your's, most truly,

A STAG HUNTER.

BOXING MATCH.

THE Duke of Hamilton will rejoice to hear that "the age of Boxing is not past, nor is the glory of sparring extinguished for ever.

Monday, Sept. 18, a pitched battle was fought in Hyde Park, between Burke a cooper, and Christian a shoe-maker. The contest lasted 55 minutes, during which time there were 22 rounds of the hardest fighting recorded on the Broughtonian annals. The friends of the shoe-maker finding he was so well lathered that he was near his end, broke the ring, and attempted to charge a foul blow upon the cooper; but the majority of the spectators would not agree to this, and the cooper was declared the victor.

THE FEAST OF WIT;

OR,

SPORTSMAN's HALL.

A BON MOT.

A Knight of the Order of the Golden Fleece, employed in an embaſſy to Florence, with great parade and oſtentation, wore ſeveral chains round his neck. A man of wit, who ſaw the Knight, thus capariſoned, obſerved, that for other mad people one chain was thought ſufficient, but this fellow requires a dozen.

A Foreign ſailor was puniſhed the other day for calling his landlord's wife a b—h. The defence of the foreigner was, that he heard the appellation ſo often applied by the huſband, that he really thought it was the wife's proper name!

A SNUFF-TAKER.

A good-humoured ſon of Momus, at Liverpool, has contracted ſuch an attachment to the ſnuff-box, that he never takes leſs than twenty pinches before breakfaſt—40 before dinner—and 60 more before night; in all 120. Each pinch takes him up at leaſt a minute, in opening the box, feeding the noſtrils, whiping, blowing, &c. ſo that he is preciſely two hours per day, or fourteen in the week (Sunday included) or about eight weeks in the year, very rationally and profitably employed in tickling his noſe: which, from being crammed ſo frequently, has undergone a material revolution in its phyſical form; poſſeſſing, as it were, a kind of elaſticity; involuntarily cocking itſelf up, when the ſnuff-box is introduced, not unlike the majeſtic proboſcis of an elephant.

Of all the doubtful law caſes that were ever argued, the following, related by Chriſtophorus Groſs, is perhaps amongſt the moſt doubtful:—A miller's aſs, wanting to drink, ſtept into a Fiſherman's boat, which was looſely floating in the water, and being thus put in motion, carried the beaſt down the ſtream. A law-ſuit was inſtituted between the parties. The fiſherman complained that the miller's aſs had ſtolen his boat. The miller replied, that the Fiſherman's boat had run away with his aſs. Here iſſue was joined.

A SINGULAR INSTANCE OF SUPERSTITION.

There is a part in the country of Naples, very much infeſted with robbers and murderers. A ſhepherd of that diſtrict, at confeſſion, acknowledged with much ſorrow and contrition, that once on a faſt day he had drank ſome drops of milk. "Does your conſcience upbraid you with no other wickedneſs?" ſaid the father confeſſor. "None at all, replied the penitent." "Did you never join any of your countrymen in robbing and murdering paſſengers?" "Oh yes, very often, good father; but we do not look upon that as a matter of conſcience."

An article in the paper ſtated, that the high wind lately had blown ſeven

seven calves out of the cow-house over a hedge twenty yards, without doing them any harm; and that it had also blown a duck's head off! A correspondent who had seen the article, and deeming it a Munchausen, says, "To have made the account quite complete, the wind should have blown the calves back again into the cow-house, and the duck's head on again!"

THE PREVAILING PASSION STRONG IN DEATH.

At the time when several Proclamations were issued for the purpose of mending the specie, Mr. De L——, the banker, who was extremely rich, was at the point of death. He assured a friend, who visited him, that he was quite resigned to the will of God, and asked him for his prayers. As he was leaving the chamber, the dying man exclaimed, "Pray Mr. P——, can you tell me how the currency is settled?"

THE USE OF REPUTATION.

D'Arezzo, a celebrated lawyer in the fifteenth century, purloined, with the assistance of his servant, several pieces of meat from a butcher's shop. Two of his scholars, of doubtful character, were put in prison for the theft. D'Arezzo in vain accused himself; it was thought he did so to rescue the young men. When the affair was blown over, and the students set at liberty by paying a certain sum, D'Arezzo brought undoubted proofs that he had been the thief. On being asked "why he had committed an action so unlike himself, and of which no one would have suspected him," he replied, "he did it to set in a strong light the advantage of a well-established character."

THE PRIEST.

A priest in the streets of Paris was in danger of being crushed between the pole of a carriage and the wheels of a cart. He called out vehemently to the coachman and carter not to move forward, or they would kill a Priest. An Artisan, who was near him, and in the like danger, exclaimed, "Here is a Priest who makes as much noise as I ought to do, who have a wife and four children." "Why now," said the indignant Priest, "I have more children than you."

A NEW WAY OF RECKONING.

A sailor married a woman, staid with her the first night, went to sea the next day, and returned in three months, when he found her brought to bed of a boy. Jack stormed, and called his wife a w——; but the nurse abused him in her turn for a sea-looby, that did not know how to reckon for a woman on shore, who counts by day and night. "Well," says Jack, "but that makes but six months, and she ought to go nine." "You fool," replied the matron, "you have forgot the three months you were at sea; only recollect that three months by day, and three at night, and three at sea, make nine months, and you'll find your wife an honest woman." Jack could not follow this calculation, and was obliged to knock under, and allow it to be all right.

At the last Norwich Assizes, a plain country farmer (who had formerly formerly been an attorney) was called upon as an evidence in a certain cause, when being asked in an authoritative tone by the counsel to assign his reason for quitting the profession of the law, replied very drily, "Why, Sir, to tell you the truth, during my connections in the law, I saw so much shuffling, quibbling, and prevaricating, that I began to be heartily ashamed of my profession, and therefore quitted it for the more honourable one of a farmer."

One of the last American papers (the Columbian Sentinal) contains the following curious advertisement:

"Whereas my wife, Betsey, has eloped from my bed and board, and has behaved in an unbecoming and indecent manner, by propagating the human species in a way other than the one prescribed by law: This is to caution all kinds of people, both Black, White, or Pye-balled, against trusting her on my account, (harbour her they may if they can) as I will not pay one MILLE of her contracting after this date.

"JOHN BOULTON."

Bridgewater, July 30.

A waggish publican, at Seven Oaks, Kent, among his other inscriptions, has now written over his door—"Licensed to keep a Clock."

The convict who was lately executed at Leicester, and who adopted the singular mode of travelling in a post-chaise to the place of execution, was no less remarkable for his crimes than a copious fund of low humour. He got the following notice put up in the most frequented houses in the town:—"Wanted an agreeable companion in a post-chaise to go a journey of considerable length, and upon equal terms. Enquire for particulars at the Castle." It is almost superfluous to mention, that upon the terms being made known, the gentleman could not find a partner.

Some persons going into a corn-field, near Oxford, among whom there was a lad about nine years of age, were told by some of the farmer's men they were trespassing: "Why then," saye the boy, "you must forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive them that trespass against us."

A few days since, an ostler at Towcester, of the name of Twist, led his wife in a halter into the public market-place in that town, amidst an amazing concourse of people, and sold her to a Knight of the Whip, at one of the Inns there, for the round sum of twenty-five pounds; and it may be further observed, the parties seemed much pleased with this kind of barter, each returning home well satisfied.

At a wedding lately near Stamford, the bridegroom, by way of precaution, thought proper to have present, besides the parson and clerk, a man-midwife! There was, however, no occasion for such haste, as the lady was not brought to bed before the next morning!

Mr. Christie and others, celebrated for the elegance of their language in the composition of their advertisements, are altogether outdone by a provincial auctioneer, who advertises an estate for sale, or to be exchanged for another, stating, that he is appointed Plenipotentiary to treat in this this bufinefs; that he has ample credentials, and is prepared to ratify his powers: that he will enter into preliminaries either upon the principle of ftatuo quo, or uti poffidetes; that he is ready to receive the projet of any perfon defirous to make the purchafe or exchange, and to deliver his contre-projet and fina qua non, and indeed at once to give his ultimatum!—affuring the public, that as foon as a definitive treaty fhall be concluded, it will be ratified by his conftituent, and daily guaranted.

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

ELOPEMENTS.

On Wednefday the 6th of Sept. Mifs D———, daughter of a refpectable Magiftrate for the County of Effex, eloped from her father's houfe with Mr. C——— H———, fon of a Gentleman in one of the Public Offices. At twelve o'clock at noon, the Lady went out of the parlour, telling her mother fhe was going to drefs, but inftead of doing fo, went into the garden, got out the back way, croffed a field, and was helped over the pales by two Gentlemen, who handed her into a poft-chaife and drove to Epping, where Mr. H——— was waiting in a poft-chaife and four; fo that the Lady had nothing more to do than to ftep from one chaife to the other, and drive off. They took the road to Gretna Green, and have not fince been heard of. Mifs D——— is a very elegant and accomplifhed young Lady, about twenty years of age, and, when twenty-one, will have an annuity of 900l. per annum.

The elopement from the neighbourhood of Staines, which took place a few evenings fince, was accompanied with fome fingular circumftances. The young lady is the daughter of an Irifh Peer, and extremely beautiful. She quitted her mother's houfe, on the banks of the Thames, at midnight, in a robe de chambre, with a coloured handkerchief round her head; and in that drefs, walked ancle-deep in mud, near three miles, alone, to meet her feducer. The Gentleman was alfo difguifed; and the Romantic pair fet out together, as foon as they met, for London. What adds to the enormity of the tranfaction is, the Gentleman's being a married man, whofe amiable wife, and two lovely children are left to lament his folly. The inamorato was the intimate friend of the young Lady's family!

On Wednefday the 6th of Sept. Jukes Coulfon, Efq. and Mifs Shergold, daughter of Mr. Shergold, banker, at Brighton, fet off poft from that place, on a matrimonial expedition to Gretna Green, where Cupid's blackfmith has probably, ere this, riveted the hymeneal chains.

HYDROPHOBIA.

A dog went mad at Taplow, about three weeks fince, and bit five perfons, of whom three were children. Two of the latter are fince dead. One of thofe who furvives had recourfe to a fkilful furgeon, who took the only efficacious means, that of cutting out the part affected. For the reft, great fears are entertained.

A tyger, within thefe few days, broke from his cage in Exeter Change,

Change, and killed him two or three monkies. The keeper fortunately ſtabbed this ferocious monſter, while he was ſo eagerly feaſting upon one of the monkies, that he did not obſerve the approach of the man.

An high ſpirit of emulation at this moment pervades the ſporting world—and the great ſtruggle with fox-hunters is, who ſhall bring their horſes to the field in the moſt complete condition. In the preparation of hunting ſaddles and hunting uniforms, ſadler's and taylors derive no ſmall profit annually from the competition for ſuperiority in taſte and neatneſs, at the commencement of the ſeaſon. The Meyneil, the Hatfield, the Calvert, the Berkeley, the Rowley, the Dyke, the Denn, (late Newman) the Spencer, the Raby, the Woburn, and the Fitzwilliam Hunts, with a long liſt of et ceteras, all feel ſenſibly alive to the force of their imaginary pre-eminence, and we doubt not the literary trumpet of fame will, during the ſeaſon, ſurprize the ſomniferous cit, and entertain the country 'ſquire with the wonders of the chace, when tranſmitted to every part of the kingdom through the hebdomadal medium of the County Chronicle, or its periodical echo, the Sporting Magazine.

The following ſingular fact is ſent to us by a Correſpondent from the Devizes:—A terrier dog, about a year old, belonging to a gentleman of that town, had a habit of repeatedly running into the ſtreet, and biting paſſengers without any provocation, which occaſioned his owner to order him on Saturday, July 5th, to be deſtroyed. Accordingly he was hung for a conſiderable time, till there was no ſigns of life remaining; but in order that he might be the more effectually diſpatched, the perſon who undertook the buſineſs, upon taking him down gave him ſeveral ſevere blows on the head with a large ſtick, and after letting him lie ſome time, threw him into a neceſſary, twenty-four feet deep, and no more was thought of the matter: but on Sunday, Auguſt 6, (a ſpace of 32 days) the cries of a dog were diſtinctly heard, and by letting down a lighted candle, he was obſerved walking about. Proper perſons were immediately employed, and with the aſſiſtance of ropes, &c. a lad was let down, who ſecured the dog, and brought him up; and, to the great aſtoniſhment of his maſter, and ſeveral others, who were ſtanding by, it proved to be the identical dog as above-mentioned, and though in a weak and emaciated condition, immediately after his releaſe, knew every perſon as uſual, anſwered as readily to his name as if nothing had happened, and is now perfectly recovered, excepting the loſs of an eye. He has alſo ſeveral marks about the head, occaſioned by the blows received at the time above-mentioned.

Previous to his being thrown into the neceſſary, he had been twice ſtabbed in the neck with a knife.

Monday, Sept. 4, a Yorkſhire clothier, for a wager of 20 guineas, rode his poney, an aged beaſt, not quite 14 hands high, 80 miles in 11 hours and 55 minutes, on the road near Morpeth. The rider weighed 14ſt. 8lb. and was allowed 13 hours to perform this extraordinary feat, which however he performed in the above time, without much ſeeming hurt to himſelf or his nag. Great numbers of the the cognoſcenti in theſe kind of matches attended, and upwards of 500l. were betted; 10 to 1 againſt the clothier at ſtarting; but the laſt 20 miles the ſame odds in his favour. It is remarkable, that the poney is of the common cart kind, and had brought a heavy load of cloth out of Yorkſhire but a few days before.

The Prince of Wales is to hunt occaſionally with Lord Egremont's fox-hounds in Suſſex, to throw off once or twice a week at Shoreham-bridge, &c. His Royal Highneſs's own dogs are to take the ground which has been for ſome years occupied by Mr. Bridger's pack.

Lord Sefton (who is the main ſpring of the Berkeley-hunt) kindly ſends half a dozen hunters to the hammer on the 12th of October; upon theſe, the juvenile ſprigs will have an opportunity to ſpeculate with their accuſtomed penetration.

A remarkable accident happened a few days ſince, to a horſe belonging to Mr. Cooper, of Windſor. A boy leading him to graſs, found an apple in the road, and gave it him to eat, which unfortunately ſtuck in his throat. Several unſucceſsful attempts were made by a farrier in the town to force it into the ſtomach, with a cane paſſed down the ſwallow. The horſe continued in a moſt uneaſy and dangerous ſtate for ſeveral hours, when Mr. Deane, veterinary ſurgeon, was called in, who finding it impoſſible to get it into the ſtomach from the great ſwelling that had taken place, propoſed the operation (never before attempted with ſucceſs) of diſſecting it out of the throat: this he effected without any material loſs of blood, and from a careful treatment of the wound, the horſe is ſo far recovered as to be totally out of danger.

The cream of Mr. Panton's hounds are drafted into Calvert's, to which Mr. P becomes a ſubſcriber, and retains his ſnug box at Ware, in Hertfordſhire, for that purpoſe. Theſe hounds commence their ſeaſon the ſecond week in October, under the ſtrong and reſpectable firm of Corbet, Boldero, Houblon, Panton, Calvert, and Co. and ſurely a firmer firm will not be found in the kingdom.

Colonel Thornton has got all his pointers, ſetters, and double-barrels in the higheſt order. Some ill-natured critics ſay, the Colonel occaſionally ſhoots with the long bow. We ſhall be happy to record his ſporting wonders, provided they partake not too much of the Baron Munchauſen's.

Few covies of partridges are any where to be ſeen, owing to the conſtant heavy falls of rain, both at the ſeaſon of the birds laying their eggs, and again when the young ones might be ſuppoſed to be quitting the neſt.

CARRIER PIGEONS.

Mr. P—, of Kingſbridge, about thirty miles weſt of Exeter, purchaſed in the year 1795, in London, a pair of Carrier Pigeons, and took them to Kingſbridge; but being apprehenſive, from various reportsof their natural attachment to their first home, that they might take their flight, and find their way back to London, he confined them upwards of twelve months. During this interval they bred, and one was reared. The gentleman, thinking he had kept them long enough to familiarize them to the change of the place, gave them their liberty, and they flew from Kingsbridge, accompanied by the young one, to the identical place where they were originally reared and purchased; but the young one flew back again alone to Kingsbridge.

A certain sporting parson in a neighbouring county, has litterally made himself Game-keeper to all the neighbouring gentry, and, on condition of their giving him and his servant the deputations of their manors, has entered into a contract to "supply all their tables with game during the season."

The Earl of Breadalbane is so very fond of his game, that, in the true spirit of chivalry, he throws down his gauntlet for its better preservation. He warns all sportsmen, without a licence under his hand, not to expose themselves to the danger of being challenged.

An accident occurred on Friday, Sept. 8, at Lincoln Races, owing to the son of a farmer in the neighbourhood attempting to cross the course, (or who was pushed forward by others) at the moment the leading horse was passing, at full speed. They all three came down with dreadful violence, and the mare, Hornpipe, who was close following, leaped over the whole. The farmer was taken up for dead, one arm broken, and otherwise much bruised; he is, notwithstanding, in a fair way of recovery. Dixon Bowers, the rider, and his horse were not very much bruised.

Sir John Dyke repents of having rashly abandoned the chace, and has therefore made the amende honorable to the neighbourhood of Bromley, by purchasing a new pack of fox-hounds for their amusement.

A foot race was run, on Thursday, August 31, between Lord F. Beauclerk and a fishmonger, the distance of one hundred and twenty yards, which was won by his Lordship.

ARCHERY.

Monday, Sept. 4, the Royal Kentish Bowmen concluded their season. The gold medal was won by Sir Richard Glode, who also won the bugle horn; and the Rev. Mr. Dodd was declared Captain of numbers.

Saturday, Sept. 9, a Hoopoe was shot by a gentleman at Shotley, near Ipswich; this beautiful bird is a native of South America, and is very rarely seen in Northern climates. A bird of the same name and description was shot lately near Lewes, in Sussex.

Sunday, Aug. 20, was given away in the church at Denham, in Buckinghamshire, after evening service ſervice, to the poor of that pariſh, 1200 penny loaves, which were purchaſed with the moiety of a mitigated penalty paid by a perſon of that pariſh for killing a hare on the ſabbath-day.

The ancient and manly ſcience of back-ſword, was introduced each day of the Races at Saliſbury, in the market place.—On Wedneſday the prizes were won by the Warminſter players.—On Thurſday four guineas were won by the Warminſter players, and two guiueas by a player from Lavington.—And on Friday the prizes were divided, viz. two guineas to Alexander, and two guineas between Holt, Upjohn, and Papps, all of Warminſter. The remaining prize of two guineas, went to Spratt, a player, from Alderbury.

On Thurſday, Auguſt 31, a match was run over the Beacon Courſe at Newmarket, for 100 guineas, between Mr. Corrie's Highflyer mare, and Mr. Burgh's Cricketer, which was won by the former, beating his adverſary near half a mile. Odds at ſtarting, ſix and ſeven to one upon the winner.

FETE OF THE THAMES.

On Saturday, Sept. 9, the gentlemen of the pariſh of St. John, Horſleydown, gave a boat race on the river Thames. There were ſeveral prizes—the firſt, a boat, value eighteen guineas; and five other prizes from five guineas to one; to be rowed for by ſix watermen who had ſerved their times in that pariſh. It was one of the hardeſt fought conteſts ever ſeen on the river Thames, and infinitely more intereſting, on account of the ſkill that was diſplayed, than any race above bridge. The boat was won by John Roſe. The ſpectacle was moſt attractive. The day was fine, and above 10,000 people were aſſembled on the river to ſee the conteſt. The whole was conducted with the utmoſt order, and beſides the laudable deſign of encouraging the young men of the pariſh to excel in their art, it was a very joyous and feſtive entertainment. It laſted from one o'clock till ſix in the afternoon, and not the ſlighteſt accident happened the whole day.

SAILING MATCH.

Tueſday, Aug. 22, the following boats took their ſtation in Kingroad, Briſtol, to contend for the premiums given by the Briſtol Sailing Society, viz. the Tartar, Experiment, Marquis of Worceſter, Induſtry of Briſtol, Induſtry, of Pill; Fancy, Hope, Antelope, Dolphin, and Friends. About ſix o'clock they ſtarted. The Tartar was the firſt boat that returned, Experiment the ſecond, and the Marquis of Worceſter the third, when the two firſt received their reſpective Silver Cups, and the latter a Teleſcope. No accident happened the whole of the day. The evening being very fine, a large concourſe of people of all deſcriptions lined the banks of the river to ſee their arrival.

That well known horſe Bungay, by Herod, dam by Blank, late the property of Mr. Taplin, ſuppoſed by all the diſtinguiſhed characters in the Royal Chaſe to be the fleeteſt, ſteadieſt, and beſt-bottomed hunter in the kingdom, is at length purchaſed by Lady Breadalbane for her own riding

THE HIGH COURT OF DIANA.

THREE WEEKS AFTER MARRIAGE.

A NEW SONG.

Sung by Mrs. MOUNTAIN, at Vauxhall Gardens.

Set to Music by Mr. HOOK.

The Words by Mr. VINT.

WILLY, after courting long,
Marry'd me on Sunday;
All that day I held my tongue,
But scolded him on Monday.
Tuesday I grew dull and sad,
Wedn'sday past in scorning;
Thursday drove me raving mad,
But Friday—what a morning!
Till at length that balm of life,
Money, brought a better day;
So we lov'd like man and wife,
Kissing sweet on Saturday.

Willy next began the week,
Tippling all the Sunday;
Therefore I, provok'd to speak,
Did scold him well on Monday.
Tuesday call'd him drunken sot,
Wedn'sday lubber lazy;
Thursday having mended not,
Friday drove me crazy.
Tho' I hop'd the fool would think]
Wiser on the latter day,
Not a sous for meat or drink,
Earn'd he on the Saturday.

Bent at length to change my plan
Ev'ry future Sunday,
For 'twas plain I first began
Wrong upon the Monday:
Tuesday, then, I calmer seem'd,
Wedn'sday more indulgent;
Thursday peace and comfort beam'd,
Friday shone refulgent.
Chacing thus corroding strife,
Every day's a better day:
Joy and pleasure cheering life,
From Saturday to Saturday.

THE GIPSEY SONG.

Sung at VAUXHALL.

COME, cross my hand! my art surpasses
All that did ever mortal know;
Come, maidens, come, my magic glasses
Your future husband's form can show.

For 'tis to me the power is giv'n,
Unclos'd the book of Fate to see;
To read the fix'd resolves of Heav'n,
And dive into futurity.

I guide the pale moon's silver waggon;
The winds in magic bonds I hold;
I charm to sleep the crimson dragon,
Who loves to watch o'er buried gold.

Fenc'd round with spells, unhurt I venture,
Their sabbath strange where witches keep;
Fearless the sorcerer's circle enter,
And woundless tread on snakes asleep.

Lo!

Lo! here are charms of mighty power!
 This makes secure a husband's troth;
And this, compos'd at midnight hour,
 Will force to love the coldest youth.

If any maid too much has granted,
 Her loss this philtre will repair;
This blooms a cheek where red is wanted,
 And this will make a brown girl fair.

Then silent hear, while I discover
 What I in Fortune's mirror view;
And each, when many a year is over,
 Shall own the Gipsey's saying true.

A PARODY ON THE SPEECH OF JAQUES, IN SHAKESPEARE'S AS YOU LIKE IT.

——— Sanctity's oft a cloak for Sin—
And Parsons are but men like you or me;
They have their foibles and their fopperies;
And one sees amongst them sundry characters.
To mention only Seven—And first the Curate,
Humming and hawing to his drowsy herd.—
And then the pedagogue, with formal wig,
His night-gown and his cane; ruling, like Turk,
All in his dusty school.—Then the smart Priest,
Writing extempore (forsooth!) a Sonnet
Quaint, to his Mistress' shoe-string.—Then the Vicar,
Full of fees customary, with his burial gloves;
Jealous of his rites, and apt to quarrel;
Claiming his paltry penny-farthing tithes,
E'en at the lawyer's price—Then the Rector,
In sleek surcingle, with good tythe-pig stuff'd;
With eyes up-swoln, and shining double chin;
Full of wise nods, and orthodox distinctions;
And so he gains respect.--Proceed we next
Unto the old Incumbent at his gate;
With silken skull-cap—tied beneath his chin;
His banyan, with silver clasp, wrapt round
His shrinking paunch; and his fam'd thund'ring voice,
Now whistling like the wind, his audience sleeps
And snores to th' lulling sound.—Best scene of all,
With which I close this reverend description,
Is your Welch parson, with his noble living,
Sans shoes, sans hose, sans breeches, sans every thing.

MESSMATES AT SEA.

BRAVE Oakum, Mainbrace, honest Jack,
 Matt Midships, too, was there:
Who'd the compass box, knew ev'ry tack,
 Could hand well, reef, and steer:
The glasses jingled, mirth went round,
 We troll'd a merry glee;
And, while carousing on dry ground,
 To our Messmates drank at Sea.

Sall Spriggings (who was there, d'ye mind,
 And she was all my pride,)
Said, while with tears her eyes were blind,
 And we sat side by side:
"Dear Jack, (says she) my heart will break,
 "When you're far off from me!"
"Lord, Sall, (says I) a noggin take—
 "To our Messmates out at Sea.

A thousand other toasts we gave;
 With mirth our cabins ring:
"May a Briton never be a slave!—
 "The navy!—George our King!"—
At length (from toping I ne'er shrunk,
 It somehow seem'd to me,
I could see plainest when blind drunk,)
 To my Messmates drink at Sea.

Love of our isle my heart commands,
 For Britain's fame I burn;
Where native freedom pipes all hands,
 And steps from stem to stern:
From death or glory I'll ne'er shrink,
 But douse life's colours free;
Yet, while at anchor here I drink
 To my Messmates out at Sea.

YESTERDAY.

AN ANACREONTIC.

SAY, ye studious, grave, and old,
 Tell me, all ye fair and gay,
Tell me where I may behold
 The fleeting forms of—yesterday!

Wher's

Where's Autumnal plenty spread?
Winter! where's thy boist'rous sway?
Where's the vernal flow'ret fled?
Summer! where's thy—yesterday!

Jocund spirits of social joy,
Round our smiling goblet play;
Flit, ye powers of rude annoy,
Like the ghost of—yesterday!

Od'rous sweets, Falernian wine,
Hither, boy, with speed convey;
Jes'mine wreathes with roses twine,
Ere they fade, like—yesterday!

Brim the bowl, and pass it round,
Lightly tune the sportive lay,
Let the festal hour be crown'd
Ere 'tis lost, like—yesterday!

SHAKESPEARE, OR THE STRATFORD HUNT.

" Must I write Notes, which, all so piercing
" bright,
" Let in the Object, and let out the Light?
" For murder'd Shakespeare no compas-
" sion feel,
" Almost eat up by Commentating zeal?"

On Avon's banks I heard Actæon mourn,
By fell BLACK-LETTER DOGS in pieces torn;
Dogs that from Gothic kennels eager start,
And well broke-in by coney-catching art.

Hark! Johnson smacks his lash; loud sounds the din;
Mounted in rear, see Stevens whipper-in.
Lo! first Melempus Farmer deftly springs;
(Walter de Mapes his sire) the Welkin rings:
See Warburton in Pamphagus advance,
Who never stood aghast in speechless trance;
The sage Ichnobates see Tyrwhitt limp;
Malone Hylactor bounds a clear voic'd imp;
Nor can I pass Lycisca Montague,
Her yelp, tho' feeble, and her sandals blue;
Asbolus Hawkins, a grim shaggy hound,
In music growls, and beats the bushes round;
Then Poison view Nebrophonos the shrewd,
Yet foaming with th' Archdeacon's critic blood;
In Theron's form, mark Ritson next contend,
Fierce, meagre, pale, no commentator's friend;
Tom Warton last, Agriodos acute,
With Labros Percy barks in close pursuit;
Hot was the chace; I left it out of breath;
I wish'd not to be in at Shakespeare's death.

EPITAPH ON WILL GUDGEON,

A FAMOUS FISHERMAN.

As by the Ouse, grim Death did trudge on,
He cast his net, and took a Gudgeon.
The mesh was small, a true thief net,
So out poor Gudgeon could not get;
WILL the same trick had often play'd,
But now he's in a safe trunk laid.
Thus rooks to rooks are oft a prey,
And sly men caught in their own way.

ADDRESS TO THE TOOTH-ACHE.

BY THE LATE ROBERT BURNS.

My curse upon your venom'd stang,
That shoots my tortur'd gums alang,
And thro' my lugs gi'es mony a twang—
Wi' gnawing vengeance;
Tearing my nerves wi' bitter pang,
Like racking engines!

When Fevers burn or Ague freezes,
Rheumatics gnaw or Cholic squeezes,
Our neighbours' sympathy does ease us—
Wi' pitying moan:
But THEE—thou Hell of a' Diseases,
Ay mocks our moan;

Ah, down my beard the slaver trickle!—
I throw the wee stools o'er the mickle,
As round the fire the giglets keckle
To see me loup;
While raving mad, I wish a heckle
Were in their doup!

O' a' the num'rous human dools,
Ill Harv'sts, daft Bargains, cutty stools,
Or worthy friends rak'd i' the mools—
Sad sight to see!
O' a' the tricks o' knaves, or fash o' fools
Thou bear'st the gree!

Where'er

Where'er that place, by Priests ca' Hell,
Where a' the tones o' Mis'ry yell,
And ranked Plagues their numbers tell
In dreadfu' raw—
Thou, Tooth Ache, surely bear'st the bell
Amang them a'!

O, thou grim mischief-making Chiel,
That gars the notes o' discord squeel,
'Till daft Mankind aft dance a reel
In gore a shoe thick—
Gie a' the face o' Scotland's weal
A towmond's tooth-ache!

THE IRISH NEWSMAN.

BY MR. DIBDIN.

YOU may sing of your waggoners, ploughboys, and watchmen,
Your lamplighters, sailors, and peddling Jews,
There's no trade like mine, for you're so sure to catch men,
Rich, poor, old, and ugly, all rading the news:
While round with my papers strait forward I'm going,
My masters they find me employment enough;
For we make out the business with puffing and blowing,
My horn's after blowing whatever they puff.
And between us both to
Botheroo! ditheroo! merry and frisky,
My horn always made as much noise as he could;
For sure as dear Dublin's the country for whiskey,
It must be an ill wind that blows nobody good.

If our Oracle ever shou'd fail, 'tis no wonder;
The Times are complain'd of as not always right;
And sometimes the Sun just by way of a blunder,
He sets in the morning and rises at night:
Then 'twould puzzle your worships my plan to unlock it,
How often I travel, regardless of harm,
With a Star in my fist, and the World in my pocket,
And carry a Telegraph under my arm.
And then you see I'm like the Hampshire Chronicle, open to all parties and influenced by none, and that's the way I botheroo, ditheroo, &c.

Then I've all the agraable news of the nation,
Your battles and murders, and such pretty jokes,
Wid your parliament spaaches, arrah! botheration,
And the nate little things that are done by great folks.
Then I lump every accident, death, or promotion,
Lamentables, laughables, all in a string,
Wid wedlock and hanging, for some have a notion,
For one noose and t'other is just the same thing.
And by my conscience I think so myself, for a man had better be tuck'd up at once, than plagu'd with a perpetual botheroo, ditheroo, &c.

EPIGRAMS.

Boileau used to say, that these short compositions often originated in conversation, and brought his own Epigrams as an instance.—Among these he gave the preference to the following one:

Ci-git ma femme—ah qu'elle est been,
Pour son repos, et pour le mien!

Here lies my wife—alas! Heaven knows,
Not less for her than my repose!

"Thy wife is a Drone, my good neighbour, I fear,"
Says jolly young Roger to Dick;
"If e'er 'tis my fate to be married, I swear,
"I'll be married to one that is quick."

In a fortnight, or more, Roger married a lass—
A lass neither pretty nor mild—
She was quick you'll suppose, and i' faith so she was,
For in six weeks she brought him a child.

ANAGRAM.

Four letters transpos'd mark the husband and wife,
Who, surrounded with dirt, sport a musical life;
Who poems, enigmas, and rebusses made,
While their house, like a pig-stye, their neatness display'd!
I advance nought but truth, and no secret I blab!
For Dick was a bard, and his wife was a drab!
